OPENING OF FREE MARKET ASSURED

Mayor Declares Plan to Bring Food Products Down to Living Level Will Be Tried in Spite of Legal Objections.

Boston's free open-air market to drive food prices down to a living level is made certain today under Mayor Curley's latest ultimatum.

Assured of a 15,000-foot site for free market purposes at Castle street and Shawmut avenue, the proposed market will be opened in the immediate future despite legal objections.

This is made possible by Mayor Curley's decision to pay out of his own pocket the money needed to prepare for market uses the site in question, if it is found that city money cannot legally be appropriated for that purpose.

The rent-free use of the land itself previously was assured the citizens, under an offer made by Mayor Curley by George E. Smith, a former president of the Chamber of Commerce, who favors the plan as originally outlined.

With this difficulty disposed of in advance, which prevents the raising of such legal objections as might obtain if city-owned land were to be converted into free market sites, only $200 will be needed to prepare for occupancy the plot of land in question.

WILL PAY BILLS HIMSELF.

In his ultimatum of yesterday, after instructing the city auditor and city law department to advise him whether or not city money legally could be appropriated for a free market, Mayor Curley asserted his willingness to provide this money himself, if necessary.

Under Mayor Curley's plan as outlined at present all market gardeners within reach of this city will be privileged to drive onto the new free market and sell their produce direct to the people.

Push-cart peddlers dealing in produce and food-tuffs also will be given the same privilege, with rent-free sites set apart for the different sellers according to their respective needs.

There will be no middlemen, no rent, to pay, no possibility of a monopoly of any character, the obvious result being that food-price naturally will drop to a living level for patrons of the free market as a whole.

Once this is fully demonstrated to the Mayor's satisfaction, and regardless of the ultimate decision reached as to the legality of appropriating city money for the establishment of free markets, he will try to open a number of similar institutions in other section of the city.

If this cannot be accomplished in any other manner he will appeal to the people direct to raise the initial amount needed to carry the work through to completion.

Sir James Says He Will Prove Marriage

Sir James Carlton now declares that he will prove to the immigration commissioners that the young woman whom he brought to this country is Lady Carlton and that this trouble is due to a blackmailing detective. He says, "When I arrived here, I got in touch with John N. Cole, with the result that I incorporated the United States Oxygen Company for with a capitalization of $1,000,000. When I started I was approached by the representative of a credit agency, whose scheme I refused. Since that time I have been persecuted by this person. This man caused the arrest of myself and Lady Carlton. On next Tuesday, when our hearing reopens, proof will be presented that Lady Carlton is my wife."

Stubborn? This Boy's Married!

Mrs. Kinsbury Gets a Surprise When News Comes Out in Everett Court.

When Mrs. Margaret F. Kinsbury of Everett brought her nineteen-year-old boy, Elroy F.—a strapping six-footer—before Judge Bruce in Malden Court yesterday on a charge of being a stubborn child because he kept staying away from home, the "stubborn child" surprised his mamma by declaring himself as a married man with a perfectly good home of his own.

Mrs. Kinsbury had said to Judge Bruce:

"Elroy stays away from home all the time. I never see him. This last time he was away two weeks and I didn't hear a word from him."

"What's the matter, Elroy, that you stay away from home so much?" asked His Honor.

"Nothing at all the matter, Your Honor," said Elroy, "only I've got a home of my own. I'm married."

"I don't believe it," gasped his mamma.

"Well, I am," asserted Elroy stoutly. "I was married the last of August."

Judge Bruce continued the case until September 17, putting the "stubborn child" in the custody of the probation officer meanwhile.

The Everett City Hall records showed yesterday that, on August 29, Elroy F. Kinsbury, giving his age as twenty-one, took out a license to marry eighteen-year-old Mary Wadleigh of the same city. No return of the marriage has been filed so far.

William D. Mandell of Hovey Co. Dead

William D. Mandell, of the firm of C. F. Hovey & Company, died at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at his Summer home in Cohasset.

Mr. Mandell recently returned from Europe and had been ill several months. For several days his condition had been critical. He was fifty-one years of age and was born in Boston, the son of Samuel P. Mandell of C. F. Hovey & Company and president and director of the Boston Transcript Company. He was the brother of George S. Mandell, treasurer and director of the Transcript.

Convicts Salute Wilson at Windsor

WINDSOR, Vt., Sept. 12.—President Wilson, on his way to the Summer White House at Cornish, N. H., stopped off at Brattleboro and mixed with the crowd for about twenty minutes, pacing up and down the platform and talking of golf, weather and crops with the citizens who had come down to receive him. This is the first time in many months that the President has mixed with the crowd.

At the Windsor Station, six "trusties" from the State Prison, who chanced to be at the depot, uncovered and saluted the President.

Injury Will Keep Walsh in Hospital

Broken Arm Needs Constant Attention for Two Weeks or More.

The Governor will be confined to the Deo Brisay Hospital where he is under treatment for his broken arm for at least two more and perhaps three more weeks, according to a statement given out in the executive offices yesterday by the Governor's secretary, Thomas H. Connelly.

Governor Walsh's condition is satisfactory to his physicians. His enforced absence from the State House is not due to any change in the Governor's condition for the worse, according to Secretary Connelly, but to the fact that a compound fracture of the arm such as was sustained by the Governor requires constant treatment extending usually over a period of from three to four weeks.

BRIDE'S STORY OF KIDNAPING BY AUTO

Nineteen-Year-Old Mary Rose, Wife of Interpreter for Colonel Roosevelt in Spanish War, Tells of Thrilling Capture

Mrs. Mary Rose, nineteen-year-old bride of John Rose, who was Colonel Roosevelt's interpreter during the Spanish war, told at her home, on Tyler street, South End, last night, a distressing story of being kidnaped by two men in an automobile in daylight at her doorstep, of being kept prisoner eight days in two different houses, threatened with a revolver, terrified with hideous suggestions, limited to starvation diet and insulted.

Finally, when she was ready to collapse mentally and physically, she was rescued by her husband, who had tracked her captors after feverish search, in which he disguised himself, the better to deceive the kidnapers. Mr. Rose is a detective connected with a local agency.

Mrs. Rose says that the two men whom she accuses even had a girl to help them.

JAILED FOR A YEAR.

Thomas Maroon and Moosa Harfa are the men accused by Mrs. Rose. They were found guilty by Judge Wentworth in the City Court yesterday of entering Mrs. Rose away and were sentenced to one year each in the House of Correction. Denying the charge, they appealed and were held in $2,000 each for the Superior Court.

Mrs. Rose, who has been in this country two years, and who has been married only ten months, said last night:

"For some time Harfa had been forcing his unwelcome attentions upon me. He offered me $500 if I would elope with him. I was so frightened that I told no one.

"He offered me presents. I refused every one of them. I told him that, if my husband was home, he would not dare to bother me. Maroon also knew me. He was in with Harfa. They also had a girl to help them.

"On September 1 I started to go to work. My husband was away on business and I was at my mother's house. No. 48 Tyler street. I just stepped outside the door when I saw Harfa coming. When he got to me he grabbed me by the wrist. At that moment Maroon came running up and pinned my arms behind me. Harfa put his hand over my mouth. All this was done in broad daylight with people about.

"I was literally thrown into an auto that was standing just around the corner on Harrison avenue. Before I could hardly realize what had happened I was dragged from the car into a house. I didn't know where I was. I tried to scream, but Harfa's hand was over my mouth.

THREATENED WITH GUN.

"Finally I was pushed into a black closet. Then Harfa locked the door and went away for a while. I must have fainted, either from fright or fatigue. The next thing I remember was when Harfa came into the room and flourished a big revolver in my face and told me that if I made any attempt to get away or seek help that he would shoot me.

"For six days I was held here, constantly being threatened by these two men. I had little to eat, occasionally an egg or ham sandwich. Every time I would go to the window hoping that some passer-by might spy me, Harfa would be on the opposite side of the street where no one could see him."

KAISER HAS U. S. INQUIRY ON PEACE

Washington Waits German Emperor's Reply to Note Asking Him if Germany Would Discuss Peace Plans With the Allies.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—The United States government has made an informal inquiry of Germany, asking if the imperial government wishes to discuss measures of peace with the allies.

The inquiry has been under consideration for several days by Emperor William, and his reply is awaited hourly. Upon the Kaiser's reply will depend greatly the advance of the peace movement which was informally inaugurated a week ago.

The purpose of the present exchange of communications between the United States government and that of the Kaiser is to learn if Germany is as willing to talk peace as has been intimated. Following is a remarkable chronology of the growth of the peace movement during seven days of peace talk. It was gathered from diplomatists and officials directly concerned, some of the facts being supplied by the principals.

START PEACE TALK.

Saturday, Sept. 5.—Count Von Bernstorff, German Ambassador, dined with James Speyer, the banker, in New York. Oscar Straus, American member of The Hague Tribunal, was present. As the conversation turned to the subject of peace in Europe, the German Ambassador said that while he had had no advices from his government since leaving Berlin, he recalled a conversation with the Imperial Chancellor there, in which the latter said he believed the Emperor would be willing to discuss measures of peace through mediation. Previous to the Ambassador's conversation with the Chancellor Emperor William had acknowledged President Wilson's tender of good offices, but had been noncommittal as to its acceptance. Mr. Straus asked the German Ambassador for permission to repeat the conversation to Secretary Bryan. Count Von Bernstorff gave his consent.

Sunday, Sept. 6.—Mr. Straus arrived in Washington and met Secretary Bryan. They conferred secretly and the Secretary later with President Wilson. It was decided to get the German ambassador's consent to forward a report of the incident to Ambassador Gerard for discussion with the German Foreign Office. In the meantime Mr. Straus was advised to talk the situation over with the British and French ambassadors here. He saw each that day.

CONFERS WITH BRYAN.

Monday, Sept. 7.—The German ambassador reached Washington and conferred with Mr. Bryan. The Secretary cabled then to Ambassador Gerard, to inquire of Emperor William if he desired to confirm the statement made by him to the Imperial Chancellor, and repeated to Count von Bernstorff. Copies of this message were sent to Ambassador Page and Ambassador Herrick. Meanwhile Mr. Straus had talked with the British and French ambassadors and acquainted them with what had occurred at the

DISASTER AT MARNE ENDS 'SIEGE OF PARIS'

Crushing Defeat and Flight of the Kaiser's Armies Dashes Hope of Germans to Enter the Capital of the French Republic

By WILLIAM MAXWELL.
Special dispatches of the Boston American and the London Daily Telegraph.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—There will be no siege of Paris. The government can return at once. By tomorrow the enemy will be a hundred miles from the capital, and their only anxiety will be to increase the distance between themselves and their pursuers. They are retreating by roads along which they marched in triumph a week or two ago. The remnants of their cavalry has been destroyed. They have lost guns and ammunition columns. They are surrendering in large bodies. Two trainloads of prisoners left this morning.

NEED HORSES BADLY.

"We are badly in need of horses and supplies." This wireless message was intercepted on its way to Berlin but they will want more than horses to carry them across the frontier.

"It will be a miracle if any of them get home again," said an officer of flying corps as I passed him on the road last night. I tried to sleep in a bed that a German general slept in twenty-four hours before. His last words to his officers as he hurried away were that "a great disaster has overtaken us."

The good dame who keeps the village inn, which was headquarters of the German cavalry division from Saturday to Monday understands German and carefully concealed the fact from her unwelcomed guests.

What is this great disaster that has put the enemy to flight?

This one thing must soon be known, through official reports only hint at it.

The Germans have suffered a great defeat on the banks of the Marne, the position of the two armies at the beginning of the week. The allied forces held a crescent-shaped line from Nanteuil le Haudoin, on the west, to Verdun, on the east, sweeping south through Meaux, across the Marne to Colummeries, Sezanne, Vitry le Francois and Triancourt without being harassed by the undiscovered force that their skill kept in the field.

A WEEK OF BATTLE.

The great battle along this extended front began on Monday and continued almost without pause and without any decided advantage on either side until yesterday. On each flank the Germans appeared to be holding their own and even seemed to be gaining ground on the left, near Meux. The British hold the left and center.

The enemy crossed the Marne in great forces and contested every foot of the way with stubborn and reckless courage.

"The more we killed the more they seemed to become," said an officer who described to me the earlier phases of the battle. "They swarmed like ants, coming on in masses, though rarely seeking close contact, for they had learned to respect our rifles and bayonets. On this point there is unprejudiced testimony.

Pau Captures 5-Mile Train of War Arms

By W. T. MASSEY.
Special War Correspondent of the American and London Daily Telegraph.

NANTEUIL, France, Sept. 12.—Pau, operating on the British left, has scored a tremendous advantage by capturing an enormous ammunition colmn seven kilometres, (nearly five miles) in length. This he has destroyed and has left the German right very short of ammunition for guns and rifles.

The coup effected by General Pau had an important bearing on the subsequent fighting. A few days ago, while the Germans were feeling their way to Paris, as they thought, this enormous ammunition train was winding along through Crepy en Valois, when General Pau sent cavalry and artillery to intercept it.

The train was too weakly guarded to cope with the attack. The entire convoy was captured and completely destroyed. This explains the repeated declaration that the Germans at Meaux have been fought to their last cartridge.

Barrie Coming to Give England's Side

LONDON, Sept. 12.—The Morning Post says that Sir James M. Barrie, the dramatist; Alfred E. A. Mason, the author and dramatist, and Theodore Gilmour, formerly secretary to Earl Rosebery, will sail for New York on the steamship Lusitania to advocate in the United States the British viewpoint of the war.

Their mission has been undertaken with the knowledge and encouragement of a number of English literary men, who see that, while the British white paper admirably covers the British case, there is need of less formal advocacy of the British position to answer the German press campaign in America.

D'Annunzio May Renounce Italy

PARIS, Sept. 12.—Gabrielle d'Annunzio, the author-poet-playwright, announced today that should Italy refuse to join the Allies, he will renounce his Italian citizenship and become a Servian. It is recalled that when d'Annunzio's "War Poems" were issued a few months ago the Italian government suppressed the publication of one poem, entitled "A Song of the Dardanelles," had been cut out. The Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs feared this poem would offend Austria. As Servia is Austria's bitter enemy, friends of d'Annunzio seek to trace a connection between his anti-Austrian poem and his pro-Servian inclinations.

Austrians Arrest 'Quo Vadis' Author

PETROGRAD, Sept. 12.—The famous Polish author, Henry Sienkiewicz, author of "Quo Vadis," has been arrested on his Galician estate by Austrian soldiers and sent to Cracow.

This, if true, is probably an aftermath of the author's action a few days ago in issuing a letter urging all Poles to fight for Russia, as a result of the Czar's promise of home rule for Poland.

Accept Duchess as Red Cross Nurse

LONDON, Sept. 12.—The British War Office has accepted the Duchess of Westminster's offer to serve as a Red Cross nurse. Her grace, who will take to the field for active duty at once, has donated a large quantity of hospital material.

FRENCH RETAKE LUNEVILLE; NANCY LEFT BY GERMANS

BELGIANS MAKE VIGOROUS ASSAULT NEAR ANTWERP

(OFFICIAL)

PARIS, Sept. 12.—The following official communique has been issued by the French War office:

French Coat of Arms.

Notwithstanding the fatigues occasioned by five days of incessant fighting, our troops are vigorously pursuing the enemy, which is in general retreat.

This retreat appears to have been more rapid than the advance. This has been so precipitate at certain points that our troops have gathered up at the general quarters, notably at Montmirail, charts, documents and personal papers abandoned by the enemy, and also packages of letters which had been received or were ready to be forwarded.

In the district of Fromentieres the enemy abandoned several batteries of mortars and a number of caissons of ammunition.

Yesterday their front was along the line from Soissons, running through Braisne and Fismes to the ridge of Rheims Mountains.

Their cavalry seems to be exhausted. The Franco-British forces pursuing them encountered only feeble resistance yesterday.

In the French centre and on our right the Germans have evacuated Vitry-le-Francois where they had established fortified positions. They have also abandoned their positions along the course of the Saulx river after being attacked at Revigny-aux-Vaches and Sermaize, where they left a considerable quantity of war material in their retreat.

The German forces occupying the forests of Argonnes have begun to give way beating a retreat to the north toward the forest of Belle Neve.

In Lorraine the French have made some slight progress. We now occupy the edges of the forest of Champenaux, Reahinvilliers and Gerbevilliers.

The Germans have evacuated Saint Die in the Vosges.

The Allies have crossed the Aisne River at the centre and have crossed the Marne between Epernar and Vitry-le-Francois.

Boston & Worcester Trolley Sideswipes Empty Car on Boylston Street Siding.

Two women and a motorman were reported injured and other passengers shaken up when an express trolley on the Boston & Worcester line sideswiped an empty car on the Boylston street siding in the Chestnut Hill section of Newton, yesterday afternoon.

The siding car was overturned. The trolley company said that it had no report of serious injury to any passenger. The line was blocked for two hours.

The Boston & Worcester line runs some cars as "limited," which make few stops. One of these "limited" cars was in-bound to Boston. The empty car, standing on the siding, apparently was not clear of the main line rails when the express car struck it a glancing blow.

The crash was heard on the Chestnut Hill playground, where the Chestnut Hill team was playing the Savin Hills. Ballplayers and spectators ran to the scene and assisted the passengers.

It was said that two women, one complaining of an injured leg, the other of an injured side, were put on the express car which was sent along as quickly as possible to the city so that the women could have medical aid.

Oscar Moody, motorman of the express car, was cut on the right hand. Several panes of glass were broken in the cars.

'It's Never Too Late to Wed'

Man, 80, Engaged to 'Girl,' 70

One is never too old to marry—or to marry again.

Two people agree on this absolutely. They are Captain Joseph H. White of No. 167 School street, Roxbury, who will be eighty in December, and Mrs. Sarah E. Holbrook of No. 44 Columbia street, Cambridge, who is only seventy.

The announcement of their engagement this week caused extra interest, not only on account of their splendid years, but also because the captain is thrice a widower and Mrs. Holbrook has been married twice before.

"It's never too late to marry," said Captain White yesterday. "It makes no difference how old people are, as long as they think enough of each other."

WEDDING DAY SECRET.

The interview took place at No. 147 Columbia street, Cambridge, where the captain and his bride-elect are fitting up the new home they are to occupy soon. Just when the marriage will take place, however, is a secret.

"It will be soon," the captain allowed, "but we won't say just when. That's a secret. You see, we wish to surprise our friends a little."

"We're not making any fuss about it," interjected Mrs. Holbrook.

"No," assented the captain, "we've been married so many times before that it's nothing new to us. We won't make any great stir about it. Just a quiet ceremony. Why, we haven't even picked a minister yet."

"Why shouldn't we get married?" asked Mrs. Holbrook. "We need each other's company and we are happy when together. Who's to object?"

Captain White winked a delighted approval of this sentiment. He patted his sweetheart's shoulder and said cheerily:

Mrs. Holbrook never resented the pet name "Old Girl." Far from it. She smiled entire approval at the captain.

CAPTAIN PENS VERSE.

Captain White met Mrs. Holbrook through both holding stock in the same company. He was through the Civil War. Mrs. Holbrook's first husband was a veteran. So they had an interest in war topics.

Captain White was a seafaring man. His is a marine title. Mrs. Holbrook was born in Bath, Me., the home of the square-rigger. So they had common interest in the sea.

The captain has a knack of verse. On Mrs. Holbrook's seventieth birthday he penned this bit of tribute to his lady love:

The wheels of time are continually turning;
And the light of Heaven constantly burning.
While more numerous the joys than the sorrows of men,
Your birthday's the greatest at three-score-and-ten.

"The people of Saugus want to know what is being done by the members of the town boards and who is responsible for what occurs. Our plan now favors government by a finance commission," said Mr. Small yesterday. "A mass meeting will be held soon, when radical changes will be discussed."

BROCKTON MAYOR IS ARRESTED FOR HORSE STEALING

Drives Off Rig as Result of Dare, But "Joke" in End Is on Himself.

BROCKTON, Sept. 12—Mayor Harry C. Howard, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress, wouldn't take a dare today and, as a result, was arrested for horse stealing. He wasn't locked up, for, as head of the police department, he immediately ordered himself released. This is how it happened.

C. H. Thornell, one of the Mayor's friends, left his racing horse Rendondale standing in front of Alderman John Conley's barber shop, while he attended to some business. Mayor Howard was passing when Conley called:

"Ho Your Honor, what do you think of that horse? I'll bet you a dollar you don't dare take a ride behind it."

Mayor Howard jumped into the buggy and drove off, believing the outfit belonged to Conley. After driving for two miles he tied the horse to a telephone pole and walked home, thinking how mad Conley would be when he failed to return the horse.

Meanwhile, Thornell, discovering the loss of his horse, notified the police. A squad of officers in the auto patrol finally found the animal.

After the Mayor's arrest and self-ordered release, explanations were made all round, and His Honor treated with "smokes" on the dollar won from Conley.

HOME RULE IN A FEW DAYS, SAYS JORDAN

United Irish League Secretary, Returned from Abroad, Says Parliament Session Closing, Means Bill Will Become Law

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Hon. Patrick Egan of New York and Michael J. Jordan of Boston, the latter national secretary of the United Irish League of America, arrived tonight from Liverpool on board the Cunard liner Carmania, from a five weeks' tour of England and Ireland.

"Ireland will certainly have Home Rule and that within a matter of a few weeks, perhaps even days," Mr. Jordan said. "The Home Rule Bill, already passed three times by the House of Commons, will become a law automatically with the adjournment of this session, and the sitting is liable to be prorogued any day now.

"Under the veto act a measure passed three times by the Commons becomes a law at the end of the session regardless of the action of the House of Lords. That is the status of Irish Home Rule today. It has been passed three times by the Commons. It may be that the Lords will reject it before the session is prorogued but that cannot affect the bill now.

UNEXPECTED WAR EFFECT.

"The great European war has had an unexpected effect, in that it has done away with all serious opposition to the Home Rule Bill.

"The consummate action of John Redmond, in offering to guarantee the services of the Irish Volunteers, at the outset of the war, pulled the teeth of the Ulster opposition.

"It has now died away and I believe that Irish Home Rule will be put into effect without any serious opposition. An incident in the London music hall that we attended the other night serves to illustrate public sentiment in the United Kingdom today.

"After the vaudeville performance the pictures of Prime Minister Asquith and John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, were thrown on the screen, while the orchestra played 'The Wearing of the Green.' The pictures were greeted with a storm of cheers.

No picture of Sir Edward Carson was shown. Carson is the leader of the Ulster faction opposed to Home Rule and since Redmond's offer of the service of the Irish Volunteers in the present war the Ulster Volunteers have not been heard from."

NOT AN ADMISSION.

Mr. Jordan explained that he and Mr. Egan went to Ireland merely for a vacation and not on any mission connected with Home Rule.

"We went all through Ireland," Mr. Egan said, "and we found the country prosperous and in a highly improved condition. This is due to the congested districts act, which was passed by the last Parliament.

"Under this act, the Crown has sold off the choicest bits of Ireland's grazing lands to the tillers of the soil on easy terms, to be paid for in sixty-eight years. This has placed in the hands of the Irish farmers the best of the land and they are taking advantage of it. The tenantry of Ireland today is in possession of fertile lands and are more prosperous than ever before."

According to Mr. Jordan the Irish Home Rule Bill will become a law without serious opposition and the Ulster Unionists will be forced to accept.

"The opposition has weakened?" Mr. Jordan said. "As far as I could learn, the amending act was the compromise talked about by Prime Minister Asquith which would have enabled the Ulster Counties to renounce Home Rule for a period of six years by a referendum to the electorate of each county. That is, by a majority vote, each county of Ulster was to be allowed to decide whether or not to adopt Home Rule and come under the jurisdiction of the Dublin Parliament.

ABANDON AMENDING ACT.

"However, this amending act has been abandoned. In the stress of war time Parliament has its hands full, and besides, this is no time to split the country. An agreement has been reached whereby the Home Rule Bill will become law on the adjournment of Parliament and there will be no more legislation along this line for the present. The bill, when it is law, will affect all Ireland.

"There is no fear of trouble now. The Ulster opposition has died out to a large extent, and besides, there are now 200,000 armed Irish Volunteers. Carson's 15,000 Belfast Volunteers could not get anywhere if they wanted to start trouble."

Mrs. Harvey Asks Divorce Suit Startles Brookline

MRS. HARVEY, WHO HAS FILED DIVORCE SUIT.

Mrs. Harvey was never above "pitching right in" when it came to work in studio or on the farm. Photograph shows her in one of her occasional costumes.

That Mrs. Lillian M. Harvey of No. 78 Algonquin road, Chestnut Hill, has sued for freedom from her husband, Dr. Sidney S. Harvey, was a disclosure which startled the fashionable suburb yesterday.

She is thirty-two, he is fifty. From the time of their marriage in 1901 till recently they lived in apparent harmony. They were popular and much in society, and except among their most intimate friends there was no thought of trouble between them.

The fact of the divorce suit was not made public till yesterday, when it became known that the case would come up for hearing at this term of the Middlesex Court, and that Dr Harvey will not contest his wife's petition. Her attorney, Calvin S. Tilden of the Old South Building, explained that Dr. Harvey was out of town, and that it was now too late for him to contest the suit.

In addition to the suit for divorce, Mrs Harvey has entered an attachment for $10,000 on Dr. Harvey's property, which consists in part of an equity in the Chestnut Hill estate at No. 78 Algonquin road. The property, now occupied by Mrs. Harvey, is already placarded with "For Sale or To Let" signs, with the invitation to "Apply Within" appended.

Before her marriage Mrs. Harvey was Miss Lillian M. Blakey of Roxbury. Dr. Harvey, who travels for a drug firm, has been away from home frequently.

Mrs. Harvey's attorney, Mr. Tilden, said:

"There is nothing to add to the case outside what apears in the libel which we filed last July. I do not know where Dr. Harvey is. He is, I believe, travelling for a New York wholesale drug house. A woman in the case shall be nameless for the present.

"The libel will not be contested, inasmuch as no attorney has filed an appearance for the doctor, and the time for the filing of appearances has already expired. They were married at St. John, New Brunswick, on October 3, 1901.

"The papers were served on Dr. Harvey over a month ago, but he has paid no attention to them."

Mrs. Harvey has relatives in Roxbury, and it has been her custom to spend her Winters in the South for a great many years.

MILITARISM IN DEATH THROES, BRYAN ASSERTS

Secretary at 'Star Spangled Banner' Celebration Says Power of Monarchs Is Waning.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 12.—Coming as the personal representative of President Wilson, Secretary Bryan spoke here today at the "Star-Spangled Banner" celebration. The subject of the address was "The Flag" and Mr. Bryan said that he found his text in the line with which the poet closed each stanza of the national anthem, "O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

The development of American ideals, the secretary said, had brought with it a wider freedom and a new type of courage—"a constant growth in the spirit of brotherhood." The Constitution of the United States, he said, had become a pattern copied by other nations, and now everywhere could be seen the waning of monarchial authority and hereditary power. American never had hesitated, Mr. Bryan said, to die if necessary in defence of the authority for which the flag stood.

"But the war era has ended in the United States," he added, "and is drawing towards its close in foreign lands; the convulsion through which Europe is now passing are but the death throes of militarism."

"The masses have gradually won their way to a freer air and to a larger liberty, but every inch of ground has been contested. But it was reserved for our forbears to lay upon the soil of a new continent the foundation of institutions dedicated to the doctrine that all men are created equal. It was a bold, it seemed even almost a rash, undertaking, but the enterprise has succeeded beyond the dreams of the pioneers. The triumphant democracy of the New World has stimulated the friends of liberty in the old to new advances until we see everywhere increasing limitations placed upon monarchical authority—everywhere the waning of hereditary power.

"We are entering upon a new age, in which freedom will be given new interpretations and bravery find new forms of expression. The doctrine of the divine right of kings has been discarded to no purpose if the divine right of man does not lead to man's elevation. He has become his own master, to aspire to all the heights that the Heavenly Father has put within his reach.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had It

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

Don't send your child to school until you KNOW whether or not its EYESIGHT is normal

Your child's eyes play a most important part in its ability to study. Defective eyesight is a very frequent cause of apparent dullness or stupidity in young children. A noted writer on "Impaired Eyesight in Children" said:

"That he never met with a case of chronic bad spelling that he did not find some visual defect. It must be remembered that trouble from imperfect seeing comes not only from seeing words and figures wrongly but also from fatigue of the brain caused by eyestrain. Twenty-five per cent. of children have defective vision. Frequently a bashful child fails to tell the teacher she cannot see the board and so is unable to do her work—is accused of neglect and falls behind in her classes—all because of lack of proper glasses."

We have prescribed resting glasses for use only during school hours and home study in many cases, where the improvement in school progress was noticeable almost immediately after glasses were worn.

We know that glasses worn in childhood avoid, in many instances, the constant use of glasses in later years.

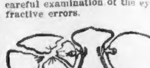
Bring your child to Wilson Bros.' Ophthalmic Department and have one of our Licensed Optometrists examine its eyes. If your child does not need glasses he will tell you so. Our reputation and standing are sufficient assurance that we will not prescribe glasses unless your child's eyes can be benefited.

Wilson Bros.' Glasses for Children—if you elect to purchase them—cost $2 or more, depending upon the particular kind of lenses our Optometrist prescribes (if glasses are needed) and the quality of mounting you select.

Many Grown Persons are wearing misfit glasses, not realizing that their eyes should be carefully examined about once a year. We have the most complete Ophthalmic department in New England for the careful examination of the eye and the discovery and correction of refractive errors.



SAVE THE PIECES!

Walsh's Chauffeur Enjoys Honeymoon

While Governor Walsh is recovering from a broken arm his favorite chauffeur is on a honeymoon at Atlantic City.

The chauffeur is Rolf L. Christiansen. He sat the bachelor executive a gallant example by marrying Miss Thelma Phillips of Belmont, his schoolday sweetheart. The marriage took place at Nashua, N. H.

Mr. Christiansen is employed by a public taxi company which the Governor patronizes, having no car of his own. He always has Christiansen drive him if possible, so the latter is known in the garage as the "Governor's chauff."

Monday night Christiansen saw his fiancee at the home of Miss Florence C. Simm on Marlboro street, where she was living. The two made marriage plans and, without saying anything to friends, secured a license in New Hampshire and were married Friday in Nashua.

Save Your Money by Supplying This Season's Needs Now

—891 Extra People Engaged and Trained for This Tremendous Sale—

The values we quote are for this sale. In a few weeks many of these items will in all probability be much higher, if indeed they can be had at any price.

N. B.—On account of the overwhelming demands made upon our Delivery Service, even greatly increased by a fleet of automobiles and wagons, it may take several days to deliver some purchases. This is one of the few sales where, for your own sake as well as ours, we ask you to take small packages with you.

Explanatory

Some people may wonder how we can afford to make these enormous concessions on Brand-New Fall and Winter Merchandise. For this reason we propose to take our customers and the general public into our confidence and state very frankly just how we do it. In the course of a year's business we obviously purchase millions of dollars' worth of merchandise. The year's purchases from many individual manufacturers and importers run into very large amounts. Now, when planning time for the anniversary sale comes around, our buyers go to these firms with whom we have done a profitable business and lay our proposition before them. This, in effect, is: For this anniversary sale we expect them to make no profit on the lots we buy from them, and to charge what they lose to profit and loss. We give a few instances:

If we require 1000 women's coats to sell for $18.00 which at other times would retail for $30.00 to $35.00 we ask the manufacturers to make them up at a loss, and which they are perfectly willing to do for this once-a-year occasion. So with the $25.00 brass beds for $12.00. So with the $10.00 silver plated tea sets for $5.61, the men's $2.00 shirts for $1.00 —and similarly with the hundreds upon hundreds of lots we have gathered for this week.

Now, you, our customers and the public in general, get the benefit of this arrangement —all through the line, from all kinds of ready-to-wear merchandise to all kinds of house furnishing goods. So in a tremendous sale like this, where we dispose of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of goods in a week's sale, we not only save many thousands of dollars to all those who are wise and take advantage of this extraordinary opportunity, but we make the event also a source of great benefit to ourselves. By giving the public such unusual bargains we make thousands of new customers and place our store in the front rank of all department stores of New England as the store to patronize for genuine bargains. And White's Anniversary Sale becomes the one great annual opportunity to save money and supply your wants for an entire season.

891 Extra People Engaged and Trained for This Tremendous Sale

Explanatory

Some people may wonder how we can afford to make these enormous concessions on Brand-New Fall and Winter Merchandise. For this reason we propose to take our customers and the general public into our confidence and state very frankly just how we do it. In the course of a year's business we obviously purchase millions of dollars' worth of merchandise. The year's purchases from many individual manufacturers and importers run into very large amounts. Now, when planning time for the anniversary sale comes around, our buyers go to these firms with whom we have done a profitable business and lay our proposition before them. This, in effect, is: For this anniversary sale we expect them to make no profit on the lots we buy from them, and to charge what they lose to profit and loss. We give a few instances:

If we require 1000 women's coats to sell for $18.00 which at other times would retail for $30.00 to $35.00 we ask the manufacturers to make them up at a loss, and which they are perfectly willing to do for this once-a-year occasion. So with the $25.00 brass beds for $12.00. So with the $10.00 silver plated tea sets for $5.61, the men's $2.00 shirts for $1.00—and similarly with the hundreds upon hundreds of lots we have gathered for this week.

Now, you, our customers and the public in general, get the benefit of this arrangement—all through the line, from all kinds of ready-to-wear merchandise to all kinds of house furnishing goods. So in a tremendous sale like this, where we dispose of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of goods in a week's sale, we not only save many thousands of dollars to all those who are wise and take advantage of this extraordinary opportunity, but we make the event also a source of great benefit to ourselves. By giving the public such unusual bargains we make thousands of new customers and place our store in the front rank of all department stores of New England as the store to patronize for genuine bargains. And White's Anniversary Sale becomes the one great annual opportunity to save money and supply your wants for an entire season.

The values we quote are for this sale. In a few weeks many of these items will in all probability be much higher, if indeed they can be had at any price.

N. B.—On account of the overwhelming demands made upon our Delivery Service, even greatly increased by a fleet of automobiles and wagons, it may take several days to deliver some purchases. This is one of the few sales where, for your own sake as well as ours, we ask you to take small packages with you.

APPALLING LOSSES BY KAISER'S TROOPS TRAPPED BY FRENCH ARMY UNDER GENERAL PAU

LONDON, Sept. 12.—The official press bureau tonight issued a general statement giving the position of the rival armies in France and covering their operations during the last four days. It follows:

A summary, necessarily incomplete, may be attempted of the operations of the British expeditionary force and the French army during the last four days.

On September 6 the southward advance of the German right reached the extreme point at Coulommiers and Provins, patrols having penetrated even as far south as Nogent-sur-Seine.

This movement was covered by a large flanking force west of the line of the River Ourcq, watching the outer Paris defences and any allied force that might come from them.

The southward movement of the enemy left his right wing in a dangerous position, as he had evacuated the Creil-Senlis-Compiegne region through which his advance had been pushed. The Allies attacked this exposed wing both in front and on the flank on September 8. The covering force was assailed by a French army based on the Paris defences, and brought to action on the line between Nanteuil Le Haudouin and Meaux.

The main portion of the enemy's right wing was attacked frontally by the British army, which had been transferred from the north to the east of Paris and by a French corps advancing alongside it on a line between Crecy, Coulommiere and Susanne. The combined operations have up to the present been completely successful. The German outer flank was forced back as far as the line of the Ourcq River. There le made a strong defence and executed several vigorous counter attacks,, but was unabl to beat off the pressure of the French advance.

The main body of the enemy's right wing vainly endeavored to defend the line of the Grand Morin River and then that of the Petit Morin. Pressed back over both of these rivers and threatened on its right, owing to the defeat of the covering force by the allied left, the German right wing retreated over the Marne on September 10.

The British army, with a portion of the French forces on its left, crossed this river below Chateau Thierry—a movement which obliged the enemy's forces west of the Ourcq, already assailed by the French corps forming the extreme left of the Allies, to give way and retreat northeastward in the direction of Soissons.

Since September 10, the whole of the German right wing has fallen back in considerable disorder, closely followed by the French and British troops.

Six thousand prisoners and fifteen guns were captured on the tenth and eleventh, and the enemy is reported to be continuing his retirement rapidly over the Aisne, evacuating the Soissons region.

The British cavalry is reported today to be at Fismes, not far from Rheims.

While the German right wing has thus been driven back and thrown into disorder, the French armies farther to the east have been strongly engaged with the German centre, which had been pus hdeforward as far as Vitry Le Francois.

Between September 8 and 10 our Allies were unable to make much impression west of Vitry. On the eleventh, however, this portion of the German army began to give way and eventually abandoned Vitry Le Francois, where the enemy's line of battle was forming a salient, under the impulse of the French troops.

Between the upper Marne and the Meuse the French troops are following up the enemy and driving a portion of his forces northward toward the Argonne forest country.

The third French army reports today that it has catpured the entire artillery of a hostile army corps, a capture which probably represents about 160 guns. The enemy thus in retreat along the whole line west of Meuse has suffered gravely in morale, besides encountering heavy losses in personnel and material.

Pope to Ask Wilson's Aid in New Peace Move

ROME, Sept. 12.—Pope Benedict XV.'s peace plans call for personal appeals direct to the heads of the warring nations, it was learned at the Vatican today.

Monsignor Bonzano, the Apostolic Delegate to the United States, has been instructed to urge the assistance of President Wilson in bringing about peace in Europe. Representations will be made to Emperor Francis Joseph, Emperor William, King George and President Poincare. It is expected the Czar of Russia will be reached through England or France.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12.—Dispatches telling of Russian defeats were received at the German embassy today from Berlin. The wireless says:

General Hindenburg victorious.

Progress in East Prussia continues.

Russians attempted to relieve pressure on defeated left wing by launching 22nd corps against General Hindenburg's flank, but according to official reports was defeated. Several batteries captured from main Russian forces. No news until 11 from western front, where the struggle presumably continues. Saxon army under General Von Hausen seems to have fought brilliantly. The Emperor telegraphed congratulations to the King of Saxony on the splendid achievement.

The 83rd Infantry Regiment was awarded 110 decorations of Iron Crosses for gallantry in storming Liege. Reichsbank Weekly report is the best since the outbreak of the war. Note circulation reduced 96,000,000; gold increased 23,500,000 and shows the bank is bearing the strain of war very satisfactorily.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 12.—Defeat of both German and Austrian armies by Russian forces was announced by the general staff today. It stated that the Austrian left wing had been cut off and would be surrounded as a result of Russian victories at Tomaszow, Opole and Turobin, in Russian Poland.

The official statement was as follows:

The German forces that invaded Russian Poland and East Prussia were repulsed with heavy losses at Chorzele and Myszeniec. These two towns are about eighty miles north northeast of Warsaw. The Austrian troops that occupied Turobin and Opole and fortified their positions have been driven out and forced to retreat twenty-five miles. They are being hotly pursued.. Tomaszow, where the Austrians, supported by German troops, strongly intrenched themselves, has been captured. In these three engagements, the Russian troops suffered heavily, but thousands of the enemy were killed and wounded.

(Opole and Turobin are respectively 118 and 130 miles southeast of Warsaw and in the region of Lublin. Tomaszow is 65 miles southeast of Lublin.)

By our victor, at Tomaszow the Austrian left wing has been cut off from the army that is opposing General Ruzsky's troops in the vicinity of Rawa, Galicia, and probably will be surrounded.

(UNOFFICIAL)

According to a dispatch from Petrograd to the Messagero at Rome, the Austrian losses in the second battle in Galicia are estimated at 130,000, of whom 90,- are prisoners.

OSTEND, Sept. 12.—It is reported from Ghent today that the German field artillery in Belgium, which had intended to mask Antwerp, has been cut off at Orlenberg, between Louvain and Brussels by the Belgian army, which took a large number of prisoners.

Belgian Coat of Arms.

(Revision by Censor.)

From Antwerp there has been received an official communique, which says:

The provinces of Antwerp and Limberg are free of Germans, as also the also the whole east of Flanders.

The Belgians have occupied Termonde and the Germans have retreated aifter heavy losses.

Success has followed all the operations of the Belgian army against the Germans who have advanced toward Antwerp. The operations beginning with the taking of Aershot were pursued with the greatest degree of method, and heavy losses have been inflicted on the Germans, principally by the artillery. The field guns of large calibre were used here for the first time.

GERMAN COLONY IS SEIZED BY BRITISH

LONDON, Sept. 12.—The admiralty announced today that the British fleet in the Pacific has seized the city of Herbertshoehe upon the German island of New Pomerania, the largest in the Bismarck archipelago.

Czar's Sister Goes to Front asNurse

PETROGRAD, Sept. 12.—Grand Duchess Olga, a sister of Czar Nicholas, has gone to the front as a Red Cross nurse. A Russian officer, who was wounded at Tarnopol, was taken to the military hospital at Ruvno. He was struck by the beauty and bearing of the nurse, who helped to dress his wound, and upon being taken to Kiev inquired her name. He was told that she was Grand Duchess Olga.

BODIES OF SLAIN ARE LEFT UNBURIED IN RETREAT BEFORE ASSAULTS BY THE ALLIES

OSTEND, Sept. 12.—The attempt of the German army under the Prince of Wurtenburg to effect a union with the armies of Generals Von Kluck and Von Buelow had met with failure, according to dispatches received by the Belgian war office today. That the attempt was made is indicated by the reports of fighting at Vavianecourt, which is but a few miles north of Bar le Duc and twenty-five miles south of Verdun, while fully thirty miles east of Vitry le Francois. It indicates that the Germans had rushed through the French salient and made their way to the extreme south of the forest of Argonne and it also indicates that the German army east of Verdun, which was supposed to be under the command of the Prince of Wurtemburg had marched straight through between Verdun and Toul to effect a junction with Von Kluck and Von Buelow.

Had this manoeuvre been successful the Germans would have been able to drop their lines of communication through Belgium and establish a much shorter and more direct line with Metz and Diedenhofen as bases. This would also bring the German forces into direct line, facing Paris from the Lorraine frontier and make it much more difficult for the allies to outflank them.

The fact that the Germans have been driven back from the south of the Argonne district and are now retreating in the direction of the forest of Bellenovo to the northward indicates that this manoeuvre has failed and that the French position remains unimpaired.

A duel of big guns ensued for two days without cessation until finally Aviator Captain George Bellender located the exact position of the German batteries, which were then annihilated by the French guns. A rout followed, in which the Germans, driven at the point of the bayonet, crossed the Ourcq in disorder, abandoning equipment and whole cases of ammunition. The valley of the Ourcq is still covered with the unburied German dead.

GERMAN CENTRE IS SMASHED BY PAU

PARIS, Sept. 12.—Vitry le Francois, the fortified stronghold of the German centre, has been evacuated, the Germans have left the neighborhood of Nancy, the French have re-occupied Luneville and the Allies have crossed the Aisne River and the Marne between Epernay and Vitry. The Germans' retreat has become so rapid that it may be described as a flight.

These, together with the withdrawal of the German left wing in the Argonne forest, were the outstanding features of the official announcements from the War Office at Bordeaux up to a late hour tonight.

To the east of Vitry, half way between this scene of the Germans' latest evacuation, and Bar le Duc, two sharp engagements were fought, at Revigny Aux Vaches and, further south, Sermaize. The result of these battles, in which the German retreat was so precipitate that they were forced to abandon a great quantity of war material and a number of wounded, was the complete abandonment of the German positions in the valley of the Saulx.

On the French left the Germans have retreated still farther, having been forced back between the Oise and Marne rivers. Until yesterday their lines extended from Sissons to the Rheims ridge of mountains, their front intersecting the towns of Braisne and Fismes. The retreat of the Germans here has taken on a more orderly character, the cavalry, which had failed to cover the rear in the earlier part of the action, having assumed its post, though reports from the front are that the German troopers seem pitifully exhausted and their mounts are in bad condition. The resistance they offered in the fitful encounters during the past 48 hours of fighting has been exceedingly weak.

The secret of the failure of the German right to offer the usual stubborn resistance was revealed today in the report of the capture by General Pau of an ammunition column four and a quarter miles long which he destroyed. The column was winding its way through Crepy-on-Valois when General Pau sent cavalry and artillery to intercept it. The guard was too weak to cope with the vigorous attack and the column was destroyed. This capture had an important bearing on the subsequent fighting.

Witnesses of the engagements during the last few days in the vicinity of the Marne agree that the proportion of German killed is five to one of the Allies. Facing a deadly raking fire of shot and shell the Germans tried sixteen times to cross the Marne near Meaux, but each time their pontoon bridges were demolished by the accurate fire of the French three-inch guns.

In their retirement along the right flank, as well as in the centre, the Germans have abandoned much equipment, leaving their wounded where they lay, besides sacrificing many prisoners.

French aviators report that the retreat of the enemy is rapid and disordered. It is evident that General Von Kluck in his dash to Provins overran his supporting centre and with the dispatch of the army of defence of Paris to the aid of the British and French left, Von Kluck was outnumbered practically two to one and was in grave danger of being completely annihilated.

In his anxiety to escape the trap he was forced to abandon much of his supplies and at certain points his retreat assumed the proportions of a rout. Indeed, a good part of his force still is in danger of being cut off and captured.

That the British first and second divisions have already been successful in cutting off a part of these fleeing forces is indicated by a report brought in from the front saying that a large force of the enemy had been struck sixty miles to the northeast of Paris and 6,000 prisoners and fifteen guns had been captured. These prisoners, who reported the German forces demoralized, were half starved and ravenously devoured the beef and biscuits which the British troops supplied them with.

The most spectacular success during this fight was that of fifty British cyclists who broke from the cover of a small wood and captured 150 of the enemy's cavalry which had become detached.

Forty other German prisoners, all wounded by bayonet thrusts, have arrived in Paris. They were with the army retreating across the Ourcq and the Marne. The Germans were in a strongly intrenched position which General Joffre ordered to be attacked by artillery.

No War Tax on Shirt Waists

Ninety per cent. of all our New Fall Waists, though copies of French and Vienna models, are made of domestic materials, consequently we shall not be obliged to advance the price on a single waist. With two or three exceptions we shall not advance the prices on a single article in our store on account of the war. We mention this fact because so many stores have advanced prices on articles not in the least affected by the war. The public ought to consider merchants of this type just as big robbers as the Turks, Bulgarians or the Arabs of the Middle Ages. In order to eliminate trade, which would be normal but for the European war, we have ransacked the market for tremendous values in all kinds of merchandise.

POWERS PROTEST TURKEY'S ACTION

U. S. Ambassador Morgantheu at Constantinople Awaiting Orders; Europe May Be Forced to Decide Issue with the Sultan

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—Ambassador Morgenthau, at Constantinople, today cabled the State Department that the ambassadors and ministers of several Powers have protested against Turkey's abrogation of the treaties relating to the domicile of foreigners, but that he did not join the protests, pending instructions from the State Department.

The State Department officials admit that no instructions have yet been sent Ambassador Morgenthau, and in the absence of Secretary Bryan today declined comment further on the situation.

The final attitude of this government is not expected to be decided until the return of President Wilson from Cornish, N. H., but the present indications are that this country will hold aloof, leaving Europe to decide the issue with Turkey.

The Turkish embassy states that the status of missionaries in Turkey is undisturbed and that Americans are in no danger. It is admitted that Turkey was wrought up by the reports that the United States intended to send several battleships to Turkish waters, but it was added that this uneasiness had been relieved by the announcement from the State Department that but one ship would be sent.

Alexandra Vourus, the Greek charge d'affaires in Washington, announced today that his government would act in harmony with the other Powers in whatever course is taken in regard to Turkey's cancellation of the extra territorial rights of foreigners upon her soil.

He pointed out that Greece has more citizens in Turkey than has any other nation and that the abolition of her consular courts in Turkey is a grave matter to Greeks under Ottoman rule.

At the request of President Wilson, Counsellor Lansing, acting Secretary of State, today requested A. Rustem Bey, the Turkish ambassador, to "explain" his utterances of a few days ago when he said that the United States should clean its own hands before mixing in the affairs of Europe.

AWAIT KAISER'S REPLY TO UNITED STATES PEACE QUERY

dinner in New York. Both the ambassadors reported the incident to their foreign offices.

Tuesday, Sept. 8.—Secretary Bryan told the British ambassador, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, what had occurred and learned the ambassador had made inquiry of his government to learn its attitude toward peace.

Wednesday, Sept. 9.—Sir Edward Grey discussed with Ambassador Page the inquiry which the latter had had from Secretary Bryan. Sir Edward cabled the ambassador here that as England, France and Prussia had agreed not to make peace without common consent, the position of the triple entente was unanimous. Sir Edward said the powers wanted no temporary truce but permanent peace. The British foreign secretary added that before the subject could be considered seriously definite terms would have to be submitted.

MUST EXPEL INVADER.

Thursday, Sept. 10.—The French Ambassador called on Secretary Bryan and discussed the point of view of France. Ambassador Herrick pointed out that unless the French had driven the invaders from their territory and Belgium had been compensated, terms of peace could not be negotiated. During the afternoon Ambassador Page's report of his conversation with Sir Edward Grey reached the White House. Great Britain was determined to make o peace until German militarism had been crushed.

Friday, Sept. 11.—President Wilson and Secretary Bryan conferred and determined to await the reply of the German Emperor. Should the Emperor's reply be a favorable one, the President may take advantage of the messages addressed to him by President Poincare and the Kaiser relative to the use of dum-dum bullets, to express a hope that the atrocities complained of may be ended through the making of peace.

Watson Lauds Hearst Peace Plan on Stump

City Councillor James A. Watson, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Eleventh District, held outdoor rallies last night at Northampton street and Harrison avenue; Melrose and Pleasant streets, South End, and Mt. Vernon and Charles streets, West End, and Roxbury Crossing, and was accorded enthusiastic receptions by nearly 2,000, who listened to his attack on the record of his opponent, Senator Horgan of Ward 23.

Watson paid honor to William Randolph Hearst for his wonderful effort, through his newspapers, to bring about peace with the European countries and also to President Wilson.

Home Complexion Peeler Works Wonders

To keep the face, neck, arms and hands truly beautiful and youthful in appearance, the treatment which seems most sensible is one which will actually remove the skin itself immediately it begins to age, fade, coarsen or discolor. The only known treatment which will do this, aside from a painful, expensive surgical operation, is the application of ordinary mercolized wax, which is as harmless as it is effective.

The wax is put on at night, just as you apply cold cream, and washed off in the morning. It absorbs the dead and half-dead surface skin in almost invisible flaky particles, a little each day, no discomfort being experienced. With the disappearance of the old cuticle, the newer, healthier skin underneath gradually appears, richly beautiful with the flush of youth. This mercolized wax, which you can get at any drug store in original package, is indeed a veritable wonder-worker.—ADVERTISEMENT.

"Peace and Friendship Among Nations"

Stand by the South, Add to the Nation's Wealth and Benefit Ourselves

The basis of the wonderful wealth of this country is the great and varied crops produced from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

The crops of the great Middle West are mainly corn crops, of the far West wheat and other grains, while perhaps the most important crop of the South is cotton.

All over the country exceptionally large crops have been raised this year, and the disposal of these crops at good prices will bring enormous wealth into our country to benefit our people in every part of the United States.

The war in Europe has had a varying effect upon the prices to be realized for these different crops.

In the far West the grain crops are bringing unusually high prices.

The same may be said of food products everywhere.

Europe, though at war, must have food—food for the citizens at home and food for the soldiers in the field. Therefore, the immediate demand for foodstuffs is great and the price of foodstuffs is high.

The tremendous cotton crop in the South, on the other hand, is affected adversely by the war, for the time being.

Factories in Europe have been shut down. The men employed in the factories have been drafted into the armies.

The demand which would ordinarily have consumed the South's wonderful cotton crop of this year is temporarily suspended.

If the South should sacrifice its cotton crop at this moment it would sacrifice many millions in wealth which would otherwise come into this country.

If the South can hold its cotton crop, which is this year unusually great and unusually good, it will soon find a tremendous market for it at the conclusion of this war.

The war is evidently drawing to a close. A few weeks will see it ended.

The factories abroad will then reopen and be compelled to work night and day to supply the product of their looms.

Prices of cotton will then soar, and millions upon millions of dollars will be paid for cotton then that would not be paid for cotton if sacrificed in the present depression.

All these additional millions will add to the wealth of this nation, and eventually be distributed throughout the length and breadth of this country.

It is the duty, therefore, of the North and the West to help the South hold its cotton for these high prices, to help it bring all that additional wealth into the United States, to help it add in this way to the prosperity of all the people of the United States.

We must all come to realize that the North and the West and the South are partners in the nation's prosperity. They are all three equally members of a great business corporation.

Whatever benefits one member will benefit all members. Whatever wealth one member succeeds in securing will be divided among all the members when the profits are distributed in national dividends.

From motives of selfish interest, therefore, as well as of fraternal interest, the West and the North should help the South hold its cotton for the high prices which will prevail immediately upon the termination of this war.

A great plan has been set afoot to have every American citizen who can afford it buy one bale of cotton at ten cents a pound.

This would only amount to fifty dollars a bale.

If these bales were sacrificed now, they would doubtless go for less than ten cents a pound, but if they are held until after the war they will sell for more than ten cents a pound.

The citizens who buy these bales of cotton, therefore, are not only doing their duty to their fellow-citizens and to the nation, are not only extending a brotherly, helping hand to their fellow-citizens in the South, but are making a good and sound investment in addition.

Above all, they are helping to bring the various sections of the country into closer relationship with each other.

They are cultivating a spirit of brotherly affection and assistance. They are doing their share towards increasing the value of our country's production and adding to the wealth which will flow into this country through the profitable marketing of that production.

They are thereby benefiting all the citizens of the country and all the businesses of the country.

They are benefiting themselves, too, but doing this in a noble and public-spirited way that will benefit others and the nation's will.

Armour in Chicago has bought seven hundred bales of cotton to further this plan. He has bought a bale of cotton for every one of his seven hundred agencies.

Every great business in the United States should follow his inspiring example. And every lesser business should buy proportionately and every individual should buy his individual bale of cotton, each contributing to the general welfare in proportion to his ability.

The security for his investment is in the cotton, and the reward for his action will be the added wealth which will come to our cotton country and the satisfaction which will be his for having done a worthy and patriotic deed.

PEACE EDITOR,
Boston American, Boston.

Please enroll my name on the world-wide committee to bring to a quick conclusion the terrible war now devastating Europe.

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....

The AMERICAN respectfully suggests to President Wilson that he make an important, and effective, and immediate move to bring about peace in Europe; that he do not conduct a diplomatic correspondence merely, with its customary elaboration and innumerable delays; that he do not attempt to accomplish so intensely important an object at long range or with conventional and commonplace methods.

The AMERICAN respectfully suggests that this country do not wait for the opportunity to intervene to come to us, but that we create the opportunity to intervene by prompt and competent action.

The AMERICAN suggests that President Wilson appoint three of the most notable men of this great nation, and instruct them to sail immediately for Europe, empowered to represent in this European complication the interests and sentiments of the people of the United States.

This commission could have as its members no less eminent citizens of the United States and of the world than Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft and William Jennings Bryan.

These men are too important, the nation they represent is too important, and the cause they advocate is too important for their advocacy lightly to be disregarded, even by the nations or by the rulers of the nations engaged in this vital conflict.

Theodore Roosevelt has been President of the United States. He has had frequent official communication and intimate personal relation with most of the rulers and statesmen whom he would approach. He was successful in his efforts to bring the Russian-Japanese war to a peaceful conclusion. He is fitted by his abilities and his experience for the great work which the people of America would repose in the hands of this commission.

William Howard Taft, also, has been President of the United States, and has always been a distinguished and powerful advocate of international peace. His efforts in this direction have been among the most notable achievements of his career. Thus, he, too, both because of his position and principles, is especially fitted for this mission of peace.

William Jennings Bryan represents conspicuously the present administration of the United States. As Secretary of State he has had close and comprehensive correspondence with foreign governments on the very subject which it would be the mission of this commission to promote.

These three men, of widely different political opinion, are united in the one great ideal and purpose in which they would represent the American people on this occasion.

They would represent the united sentiment of the American people on the question of peace all the better because they have represented such widely divergent factions and opinions on other occasions.

No man of the magnanimity of these men would hesitate to sacrifice his personal feelings or his personal conveniences for so great a mission and so great a cause.

The AMERICAN confidently believes that the opportunity is ripe for a great achievement in the service of humanity and civilization, and that the work of restoring peace and happiness to the cruelly contending nations of Europe could be accomplished by this commission, which would represent the sentiments and interests of this great nation in so intimate and accurate and impressive a manner.

MAMMOTH PEACE MEETING TODAY ON THE COMMON

Prominent Speakers from All Walks of Life, Noted Singers and a Great Band of 100 Musicians to Send Out Powerful Appeal for Cessation of Hostilities; Message from Cardinal O'Connell to Be Read.

Arrangements are complete to the last detail for this afternoon's great Peace demonstration on Boston Common, where leaders in Church and State, the professions, and the industrial and mercantile life of New England, will address a tremendous gathering in behalf of international peace.

Messages of hope will cross the seas to all the warring nations. The demonstration will be a fitting forerunner of Peace Sunday.

The exercises will be held at Parkman Bandstand. A great band of one hundred musicians will furnish music appropriate to the occasion. Singers from the concert platform will lead immense choruses. The weather promises to be everything desirable. The gathering will be the largest in Boston history since the Common was dedicated to the people.

Mayor Curley will be the presiding officer and one of the principal speakers. The Mayor will present, among other speakers, Hon. Samuel J. Elder, president of the Massachusetts Peace Society; Bishop John W. Hamilton of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rabbi M. M. Eichler of Temple Ohabei Sholom, President William Kobs of the Boston Central Labor Union, Secretary Albert J. Bryant of the World's Peace Foundation and Mrs. Maud Wood Park, of the Massachusetts Equal Suffrage Association.

READ MESSAGE FROM CARDINAL.

A feature of the meeting will be the reading of a cablegram from Cardinal O'Connell.

His Eminence was asked by wire at Rome if he would not send a statement to this great Sunday afternoon assemblage of his fellow citizens of Boston. Cardinal O'Connell responded from Naples, just before sailing for home. His great interest in the peace movement has long been known. His message to this afternoon's gathering is in line with his well known sentiments.

The response to Mr. William Randolph Hearst's suggestion, that the time is here to urge "peace and friendship among the nations," has been so quick and big and widespread that it is plain that Mr. Hearst gave expression to a hope that already permeated every American heart.

Boston, Massachusetts, New England, are unanimous for peace. The revelations of this war have created a horror of all wars.

He was the first of the speakers to accept an invitation to take part. Then came the unfortunate accident in which he was thrown from a horse.

GOVERNOR SENDS LETTER.

Yesterday, however, the Governor sent to the State House for one of his secretaries and dictated a letter which Mayor Curley will read this afternoon from Parkman bandstand. The Mayor said last night that every line of the Governor's letter is alive with the splendid sentiment of the day.

"What Governor Walsh has written, to this meeting," Mayor Curley says, "is so splendid that it could hardly be improved upon except by the physical presence of its author."

There will be [illegible] of any foreign nation at this meeting. No resolutions [illegible] n will be considered or tolerated. The people of Bos[illegible]ng to take sides between the nations at war. The one and only idea of this meeting is Peace and how peace speedily may be restored in Europe to the end that civilization [illegible] upon which it has progressed onward towards the light in the slow fashion of the centuries. Peace Movement Receiving Strong Aid From Labor

On the speakers' platform will sit the members of the executive committee of the Boston Central Labor Union. Organized labor is on record against war and in Boston—is in full and hearty accord with the purposes of today's assembly. Speaking for the 85,000 men and women enrolled in the trades organizations of Greater Boston, the executive committee of the C. L. U. has given the Peace Meeting its unanimous endorsement. So, too, have churches and fraternal organizations throughout the greater city.

also. Their director is Mr. Theron D. Perkins. Members of the committee acknowledge their obligation to the ladies and gentlemen of the quartet as well as to Director Perkins. But that is the way it has gone. Everybody you ask says he is going to the Peace Meeting. Everybody who was asked to help dropped everything else for the time being to pitch in.

On the speakers' platform will sit the members of the executive committee of the Boston Central Labor Union. Organized labor is on record against war and—in Boston—is in full and hearty accord with the purposes of today's assembly. Speaking for the 85,000 men and women enrolled in the trades organizations of Greater Boston, the executive committee of the C. L. U. has given the Peace Meeting its unanimous endorsement. So, too, have churches and fraternal organizations throughout the greater city.

The Common in the vicinity of Parkman bandstand is so beautiful at this season that no attempt to decorate the stand has even been considered.

PEACE FLAGS.

Two great Peace flags will be strikingly displayed, however; one of them the Stars and Stripes, with a white border, and the other a great blue banner with PEACE written across its azure field in letters of pure white.

Hon. Samuel J. Elder, president of the Boston Bar Association and for [illegible] years prominently one of [illegible] leading attorneys of the East [illegible] will make one of the important addresses. Mr. Elder four years ago was selected to represent the United States at The Hague Peace Tribunal, the Atlantic Fisheries arbitration with Great Britain. He has had some personal experience, therefore, in that great international court before which [illegible] hoping that the nations would hereafter settle their differences. Mr. Elder's address this afternoon will be a treat.

Rabbi Harry Hen[illegible]ow may be looked for [illegible] comprehensive and important [illegible] one of the most distinguished churchmen in the Methodist denomination. Dr. Hamilton has been a bishop since 1900. Nearly forty years ago he joined the People's Church in Boston, was later a pastor in Somerville and East Boston.

Mrs. Ilera may be expected to say just what Woman thinks of war; not this [illegible] but every war. She is not unlikely to express in words just what some of the suffragists have been thinking for some weeks of the "lords of creation."

Rabbi Fichler, Mr. Bryant and President K[illegible]s of the C. L. U. round out a decidedly representative list of speakers. When they have been heard, and when the great crowd hears the letter of the Governor and the message from Cardinal O'Connell, no man will have occasion to doubt that Boston—all Boston, UNITED Boston—stands for peace.

Remember the hour—2 this afternoon—and, if you would hear all the speakers distinctly, try to be on hand early.

State signified their desire to be enrolled on the World Peace committee.

SAN FRANCISCO

SAN FRANCISCO [illegible] The first concrete result of the peace movement in this city will be a mass meeting Sunday afternoon in the Hearst Greek Theatre on the campus of the University of California, at Berkeley. President Wheeler of the university will be the orator of the day. Governor Hiram Johnson and John D. Fredericks, Republican candidate for Governor, are both expected to speak. Massed choirs from all the churches will sing. Peace resolutions have been prepared for adoption at this meeting, and they will be indorsed at successive meetings to be held.

On Sunday afternoon, September 20, a great mass meeting will be held in the Stadium, Golden Gate Park, for the ultra-cosmopolitan population of San Francisco.

Charles C. Moore, president of the Pan-American International Exposition, has announced he will immediately take steps to dedicate for peace purposes one of the completed structures of the exposition.

ATLANTA.

ATLANTA, Sept. 12.—The Atlanta Georgian prints the names of more than two hundred Georgians who wish to be enrolled on the world-wide committee to bring peace in Europe. Men of prominence throughout the South are indorsing the movement started by the Hearst papers.

Asa G. Candler, an Atlanta capitalist, who recently gave $1,000,000 to the new Methodist University, said: "This movement by the Hearst newspapers to bring about peace in Europe and the consequent restoration of normal conditions in this country and throughout the world is highly encouraging and should receive the hearty co-operation of every citizen in our land. Every peace-loving citizen should rally to the Hearst newspapers and aid in furthering this great movement that means so much to our nation."

THOUSANDS OF AMERICANS JOIN IN MOVE FOR PEACE

Sentiment Against Carnage on European Battlefields Sweeps Over Nation.

Throughout the nation the work of crystallizing and concentrating public sentiment against the European war was carried on yesterday by the Hearst newspapers. Everywhere the movement is being received with spontaneous approval by citizens of all classes. Hundreds of names were added to the membership rolls of the great World Peace Committee. The Hearst newspapers have received from which the Hearst newspapers are carrying on this work reported as follows.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The national official heads of six great fraternal [illegible] including the American Federation of Catholic Societies, have pledged the support of their members and their [illegible] to the World Peace movement. The organizations represent a total membership of seven and a half million of people. The organizations are:

Independent Order of Odd Fellows.
Knights of Pythias.
Order of Elks
American Federation of Catholic Societies.
Improved Order of Red Men.
Ancient Order of United Workmen.

While the national heads of these organizations were making their pledges, the telegraph brought also promises of support from subordinate officials of the orders, and from the New York Peace Men, the New York Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows of Illinois.

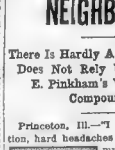
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with such excellent results that I am now feeling fine. I recommend the Compound and praise it to all. I shall be glad to have you publish my letter. There is scarcely a neighbor around me who does not use your medicine."—Mrs. F. Johnson, R. No. 4, Box 30, Princeton, Illinois.



Experience of a Nurse.

Poland, N. Y.—"In my experience as a nurse I certainly think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a great medicine. I wish all women with female troubles would take it. I took it when passing through the Change of Life with great results and I always recommend the Compound to all my patients if I know of their condition in time. I will gladly do all I can to help others to know of this great medicine."—Mrs. Horace Newman, Poland, Herkimer Co., N. Y.

SAYS SULPHUR IS SURE TO RELIEVE ITCHING ECZEMA

Get an Ounce of Sold-Sulphur Cream and Heal Skin Eruptions Right Up.

Any breaking out or irritation on the face, arms, legs or body, when accompanied by the usual symptoms of itching, when the skin is dry and feverish, can be readily overcome by applying a little sold-sulphur cream, says a noted dermatologist.

He informs us that sold-sulphur instantly allays the angry itching, the eczema right up, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Sold-sulphur has occupied a secure position for many years in the treatment of cutaneous disorders because of its parasite-destroying property. Nothing has ever been found to take its place in treating the bothersome and irritating [illegible] of eczema. While not always necessary, sometimes one application is sufficient to subdue the itching irritation and often years of torture before are ended in an application or two. In fact, I have troubled who has tried to obtain at any pharmacy an ounce of sold-sulphur cream, which is another name for sold-sulphur, in the form of a powder as an ordinary cold cream. It is inexpensive and the prompt relief it affords, particularly in healing eczema, proves very welcome.

Foiled Again!

Read how Pauline and her sweetheart once more escape the villain's desperate plot in today's installment of that famous Motion Picture Novel—

TAY—Say, Walt, did you ever hear of a newspaper man being on time? Here we've been waiting for that reporter fella for half an hour and haven't seen hare nor hounds of him.

WALT—Oh, that's right. Let's see, we were going to be interviewed, weren't we? Say, what is an interview, anyway?

TAY—An interview, in plain language, is simply a conversation to elicit information for publication.

WALT—Oh, well, if he's going to do all that I'll get stage fright. Can't he just come and talk to us?

TAY—If he doesn't show pretty quick we won't even let him sing to us.

WALT—We'll put it in writing and mail it to him.

TAY—Sure. We'll write him a story called "Waiting in the Lurch."

WALT—Not much to talk about now but war and the mosquito peril.

TAY—Are there many skeeters abutting on your Summer villa?

WALT—Many? That's where they mobilize. They're as thick as Dutchmen on the French frontier, and you can't kill 'em nearly so fast.

TAY—I guess you didn't plant any citrons in your garden.

WALT—What's the idea?

TAY—Why, citrons give birth to young citronellas, which descend upon the mosquitoes in vast hordes and make them pay up, rendering them stingless.

WALT—Whatcha mean, pay up?

TAY—They collect their bills.

WALT—But can't the mosquitoes contract new bills?

TAY—Nope. Nobody'll trust 'em.

WALT—We have a Swede cook who believes in letting a skeeter get full before she kills him. Then she says it doesn't sting.

TAY—I've heard that's what makes all the Swedes so pale looking. They're all mosquito-feeders.

WALT—Well, she says when a mosquito gets full, he crawls away and dies some place, just like any old drunk.

TAY—Then the humane thing to do, I should say, would be to kid him before he commits suicide, and thus put him out of his misery.

WALT—Yunno, I don't mind the cook's system, except when she kills two or three full ones on her face at once. Then she looks like a German student after a duel.

TAY—Down my way the mosquitoes sing as loud as peanut stand whistles.

WALT—Well, I have some tame storks in my backyard nearly as big as our mosquitoes.

TAY—If those two varieties ever meet where I am I bet they'd bore me to death.

WALT—I'm training some around my house to rent this Winter.

TAY—I didn't know they could be happy with the snow and ice around.

WALT—Oh, you betcha. I'm going to rent mine to the excavators to drill holes for blasting.

TAY—Isn't it funny that they attack the women more than the men?

WALT—Uh-huh. That's the reason the women know how to slap so well.

TAY—Are you much of an authority on war, Walt?

WALT—Try me. I'm Sherman on war.

TAY—What's the best way of ending this European annoyance?

WALT—Let all the kings get together inside a little fence and try to lick each other. Then whoever gets the most touchdowns is it.

TAY—It's a crooked game anyhow. There are five kings in it.

TAY—Automobilizing, one might say.

WALT—It's too bad the war keeps all the nice emigrants from coming over.

TAY—I know. It's a good thing Teddy got back from South America otherwise this country would be in danger of being depopulated.

WALT—The Black Hand and a lot of nice New York clues have been discontinued.

TAY—And the I. W. W.'s are actually glad now that they live in the United States.

WALT—What's happened to the English suffragettes?

TAY—They're doing everything but demanding the equal right with the men to go to the front.

WALT—Two o'clock. I gotta paint my face and part my hair.

TAY—This is the last time I ever wait for a reporter. If he gets sore he can go ahead and print lies about me. Who believes the papers anyway?

WALT—I'm glad he didn't come now. We had a good little session together.

THE THIRD PARTY (appearing)—Gentlemen, I have heard all. Fly for your lives!

A Scene from the Rattling Farce by Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo, from Mr. Field's Book of the Same Name. Published by Permission

HARRY—This is Russian P... SIGNORA—Well, here's to the Czar.

CHARACTERS IN THE SCENE.

BLANCHE .... His pretty l... wife, susceptible to the attentions of a famous opera tenor
SIGNOR MONTI .... The famous opera tenor
SIGNORA MONTI .... Who is on to Monti

THE Hawkinses and the Montis live in t... apartment house. They have met through young Mrs. Hawkins' proclivity to make f... with all the people in the house, most of who... pen to be attending a card party in the Hawkins' apartment this evening. The temperamental Monti is very fond of the ladies, his latest flame being pretty little Mrs. Hawkins, who is beginning, in her ... phisticated way, to be impressed by his advances. He is alone with her in the parlor, about to sing her the aria from "Pagliacci," when his wise wife comes in. She was formerly a cabaret singer

SIGNORA—Say, those card sharks in ... heard some kind of a rumor about something to drink.

BLANCHE—I'm sure there'll be enough

SIGNORA—Let us hope so. Compared to the parched feelings of that bunch in there the Sahara Desert must feel like a mountain lake.

MONTI—Ha, ha! Ha, ha!

SIGNORA—Never mind the phoney giggle, dearie. I ... you and I understand each other ... out ... at. You just ... into the next room and spread the glad tidings that the dry spell is about over.

MONTI—Excusa, please. (Exits.)

SIGNORA (as he exits)—The pleasure's ours.

BLANCHE—Now that you're here, I've something to show you

BLANCHE—Look—I got you these two ... for your anniversary present.

SIGNORA—Why two?

BLANCHE—One for each bed!

SIGNORA—How did you know I had twin beds?

BLANCHE—Signor Monti told me he was going to get you twin beds for your anniversary present.

SIGNORA—Oh, he did, did he? I wonder he didn't show them to you.

BLANCHE—I'd love to see them. I'm crazy to have some.

SIGNORA—You and Monti seem to have a lot of tastes in common

BLANCHE—Yes, I'll run up and see them after the party—shall I?

SIGNORA—Oh, sure, come right along! We've got a lot of things you haven't seen—there's Monti's bathrobe and slippers and—

BLANCHE—Now your'e teasing. Well, I'd better go help Harry with that punch. If I stay here too long he'll get suspicious.

SIGNORA—Suspicious of what?

BLANCHE—Heavens knows. I never try to find out what Harry's suspicious about. (Harry enters with punch.) Oh, here you are, dear. Is it ready? Let me taste it.

SIGNORA—Taste it? Let me get in it.

BLANCHE—Here you are, Signora

SIGNORA (taking glass)—Welcome little stranger!

BLANCHE—Oh, Harry, it's so sour

HARRY—It's a Russian punch

SIGNORA (drinking)—Well, here's to the Czar

BLANCHE—I'll get some sugar. Excuse me, won't you?

SIGNORA—Sure. I'll stay here and have a little heart to heart talk with hubby! (Blanche exits.)

HARRY—I was just going to be excused, too

SIGNORA—Excused? Say, what else have you been all night?

HARRY—I've a very important matter to attend ——

SIGNORA—You bet you have. That's what I want to talk to you about. Sit down, Sonny, it'll seem more sociable like. You know you and I ought to get together. It's up to you and me to get a double set of oars and row like the deuce,

HARRY—How's that

SIGNORA—Your matrimonial craft may not be as leaky as mine is, but it looks to me as though it was going ot get an awful big puncture

HARRY—I don't think we need discuss——

SIGNORA—What we need is no bunkum. Sit down! I saw the way you looked at my curly headed warbler tonight—and I saw the way he looked at your curly-headed wife. I haven't brought that young man up for nothing. Now, I'll tell you a few things about my Dago picture puzzle that you ought to know. The first time that I met him he was singing in a cabaret show at eighteen per. I introduced him to Hammerstein, got a few squealers raving about his high notes, got a friend on the Morning Telegraph to shoot on one of those appeal-to-music-lover stunts, great voice going unrecognized for want of a little training, and now Monti's getting two thousand a night for singing three times a week, while I'm getting nervous prostration trying to keep him out of breach-of-promise suits. Oh, I know my man all right

HARRY—That being the case, I wonder you—well, you'll pardon my saying so, but I wonder you don't speak to him.

SIGNORA—Speak to a "temperament" about his infatuations—let it think you're opposing it—oh, no, my friend. You don't know the imagination of the so-called "artist."

HARRY—No?

SIGNORA—One word from me and Monti would be lying awake nights, picturing himself a martyr and your wife a saint. You and I would be their jailors, and next thing we'd know he'd have your wife on a steamer bound for sunny Italy.

HARRY—My wife is——

SIGNORA—All right until you oppose her, just like any other woman. But I wouldn't advise you to start her imagination going. As for Monti, I'll tell you right now I don't like his symptoms

HARRY—What symptoms?

SIGNORA—Up to now he's only shown two. He growls about his food, and he's getting fussy about my figure. When he shows the third symptom you and I want to sit up and take a whole lot of notice

HARRY—For instance?

HARRY—He's trying to sing that tonight

SIGNORA—Who told you that?

HARRY—I heard him.

SIGNORA—Um! That sounds bad.

HARRY—Um!

SIGNORA—Well, anyway, there's one good thing.

HARRY—What's that?

SIGNORA—He's not began to sidle up to you yet.

HARRY—Sidle up?

SIGNORA—Yes. Just before he gets down to business with his lady loves he always makes it a point to get awful friendly with their husbands. It puts 'em to sleep. When he begins to get very polite to you and work his phoney giggle on you that's symptom number four, and that's the time to act quick.

HARRY—Act how?

SIGNORA—When we get that one, oh, boy, it's up to your family or mine to fold up the parlor carpet and get going fast. Once I get Monti away from one of his magnets he forgets her as easily as a baby forgets a glass ball. For the present, watchful waiting for ours.

BLANCHE (entering with sugar)—Here I am, dear. Now we can fix it in a jiffy.

BLANCHE—You're only trying to flatter Harry.

SIGNORA—I let Monti eat all the sugar in our family.

SIGNORA—Yes, but going fast.

BLANCHE—Signor, I shall leave it to you. My husband mixed this punch. Your wife says it's perfect. I say it is sour and flat. What do you say?

MONTI—Your husband, he maka disa drink?

BLANCHE—Yes

MONTI—My gooda friend! I give you my hand. Disa drink he is one delight

HARRY—What?

SIGNORA—Since when have you got to like sour punch?

MONTI—Since I find a-him mied by one-a expert.

HARRY—What's the idea?

SIGNORA (aside)—He's sidling up, all right. Watch him act. I say, Monti, since you can't live without that punch, why don't you drink it?

MONTI—Gooda things I take slowly.

SIGNORA—Not that I ever noticed.

MONTI—Ah ha! Ah ha!

BLANCHE—Symptom, dear? What symptom?

HARRY—Number four.

BLANCHE—Harry, dear, what is it? Are you ill?

HARRY—Ill? Ha, ha!

HARRY—Ha, ha!

SIGNORA—Say, Mr. Hawkins, you just run along out with that punch bowl. I'll finish the rest of this conversation

BLANCHE—Yes, do, dear

HARRY—Do what?

MONTI—It is perhaps that I can getta you something?

HARRY—Yes, getta me air. Getta me space. Getta out! Getta out!

MONTI—Out? You tella me to getta out?

HARRY—You've got the right idea.

MONTI—Mr. Hawkins, you're one ruda-man

HARRY—Rude? Why shouldn't I be rude. I'm not trying to get anything that doesn't belong to me. I'm not afraid to be rude

MONTI—It is time to get afraid

HARRY—I beg your pardon!

BLANCHE—Harry, please. What will everybody think? Do take your punch in, dear, then I'll send them all home

SIGNORA (to Harry)—Go along. I want to do a little whisper in the young tenor's ear. (Harry and Blanche go out.)

SIGNORA—Well, Little Boy Blue, I guess what you need is a sudden change of air

MONTI—Where I go?

SIGNORA—The man who owns this building sent you a letter this morning. I opened it.

MONTI—You opened my letter?

SIGNORA—Of course I did. He's just finished a new apartment house on the West Side of the town. He says he'd like to give it a good start by letting an apartment to exceptional tenants like us. He'll transfer our lease to that joint, give us an extra room, and it won't cost us much more. Next week you can get all your high notes and your low collars together and mother will do the rest!

MONTI—I do not wish me to go

SIGNORA—That cuts very little ice. And something else, Monti, not a word about this to any of your dear, adored ones, I can't keep moving with you all the time. It's too expensive. And another thing, in your apartment you'll be known as plain Silas Jones

MONTI—Jones! Ugh!

SIGNORA—Good respectable name, Silas. Guess you'll not feel so temperamental with that. We'll see how many young maidens fall fainting on the doorstep of a short, fat man named Jones

MONTI—You are very amuse, my dear

SIGNORA—I'm a very good wife for you, Monti.

"SAY, tramp," shouted Mutterzolb, angrily, to Milton, "what you mean by bringing your loafer friends to eat up my supper table? You think I am running a restaurant here? And a restaurant, don't forget, at least gets paid for what people eat."

"Why," interrupted Milton, "those were two sons of Mr. Levine, our big Buffalo customer, here on a visit."

"Oh, well," replied Mutterzolb, "then it was too far for them poor boys to go home to eat. Why didn't you tell me right away it wuz Mr. Levine's sons from Buffaloafer?"

"Well," answered Milton, "didn't I introduce them to you as Levine?"

"Sure you did," returned Mutterzolb, "but who, when or what Levine you didn't say. You just plainly said Levine, and just the name Levine, you must consider, don't carry along privileges mit it to eat up people's suppers for nothing.

"The name of Levine from Buffaloafer, yes, that carries the privilege, and also carries my line, too. It's bad I didn't know when the boys wuz here for supper, that they wuz Ike Levine's sons, or I would've ... what you call a supper. Not here in the house, because I'd want ... them enjoy a supper."

"They'll be here again tomorrow night for supper," volunteered Milton

"Well, if they do," returned Mutterzolb, "I'll just show Ike Levine my appreciation for his twenty years' customership. I'm going to take them boys out and give them the best A Numer One chicken and wine supper they ever had. I only wish Ike was here so's I could take him along, too."

"Gee, father," said Milton, "you're awfully anxious to blow your money. Where are you going to take the boys to?"

"To Abe Salinck's wedding," replied Mutterzolb. "And that's going to be what you call a wedding. I suppose you know that the bridegroom's father is known to keep the finest poultry there is, and for wines, where will you find anybody who keeps better wines as the bride's father?

"And that Abe Salinck, the bridegroom, I must say, is one very fine boy. He gave ... right away an invitation to his wedding—the minute I asked ... for it."

"I understand Abe went into a new business," interrupted Milton

"He did," returned Mutterzolb, "but on account of that big Europe-nut war now I am a little afraid that he went into a very bad business. He opened a Russian bath in a German neighborhood. ... war hurts me ... too, because I can't get no more imported ... since the war broke out Sam Lushinsky, in Brooklyn, had to stop ... ing it.

Could I say that to people now mit the big, high prices of food?

"What's funny to me is that around the newspaper war bulletin where I wus last night, you couldn't hear one word against the high prices of eatings. Well, maybe that's because the people ... already ... their appetites and it don't bother them. But about the war, you ought to hear them fellers talk, and what talkers! The greatest I ever heard. I bet you could pick up a good salesman there cheap. And what excitements goes on there! Every nation that's in the war is represented there. Waiters, barbers, bootblacks, bakers and all the rest of the nations. And they all say that the information of the war what comes in on the bulletin boards and the newspapers are fakes. And that must be so, too, because they could give you information that you can't find on no bulletin boards or newspapers.

Long-Winded-Ness

A WASHINGTON man has gathered a collection of sayings, more or less witty, provoked by the longwindedness of tiresome speakers.

John Corning, when superintendent of the Central Pacific Railway, on the occasion of a visit to his brother in Albany, was taken to church and heard a sermon remarkable for its length.

"What do you think of our preacher?" asked the brother, as they left the church.

"He is very fine, but has poor terminal facilities," said the practical railroad man.

Joe Blackburn, formerly Senator from Kentucky, was once the subject of a cane presentation, and stood while the spokesman of the donors made a speech that ran to an elaborate oration.

"He didn't want me to have the cane until I really needed it," said Joe to a friend who commented upon the length of the speech.

Herr Lasker, the famous chess player, once attended a church in Philadelphia, when the bishop of a foreign diocese was present. The young rector had prepared a sermon in honor of his distinguished visitor, in the delivery of which he tired every one except the bishop, who paid close attention. Part of the congregation left the church.

"Well," said the chess player, "that preacher is the first man I ever met who hadn't sense enough to stop when he had nothing left but a bishop."

Rear-Admiral Peary, on returning from one of his polar expeditions, was invited to a banquet in New York, where an after-dinner speaker talked an hour.

"What do you think of the speaker?" Peary was asked.

"He is like an Arctic sunset," said the explorer. "Bright and interesting, but provokingly long in operation."

"Iggy" Boyle, the old White Sox first-baseman, was once dragged to church by a friend during a Spring training trip. The preacher, thinking he might not have another chance at the ball players, made a special effort that consumed much time.

"He got round to the right," commented Iggy, "but he was sure an ice wagon coming home."

Montenegro and the Montenegrins

Written Especially for the Smile by One Who Has Never Been Near the Place.

THE Montenegrins live on the steep sides of a succession of mountain on the coast of the Adriatic. They are about 131 in number.

The moment any nation declares war on any other nation the Montenegrins jump in and whale away at the nearest combatant. They always win a city or two, and then when the others come rushing all the Montenegrins scoot for the hills and refuse to give up what they won and retire to the side of it in spite of land.

Several nations have tried to take the upright silver of rock away from the Montenegrins, but the latter, by dint of roping themselves to the cliffside and kicking boulders loose upon the heads of the invaders, have managed to hold it for 800 or 900 years.

Montenegrins never become bank clerks, because there are no banks on the side of the hill. They never become railroad men, because no railroad could be laid up the side of [illegible]. They never in the course of that other people become [illegible] when anybody [illegible] they're all there in a bunch. However, they'll soon have to get a new mountain. The old one has been pretty nearly used up on repelling eight centuries of invaders.

WAR

As It Was Discussed at the Homeville Women's Club

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company, Great Britain Rights Reserved.

"FOR our little informal chat [illegible] topic of the week, I would suggest we take up the war [illegible] that now seems to be going on in Belgium, Germany, Austria, [illegible] France and Europe," said Mrs. John Jenkins, the president [illegible] of the Homeville Woman's Club.

"By all means let us, it will [illegible] be broadening," assented Mrs. Phipps.

"As though she needed anything broadening," hissed Mrs. Peters to Mrs. Hicks. (Mrs. Phipps was [illegible].)

"Unless," continued Mrs. Jenkins, "you prefer to go into a discussion of this paper Mrs. Domeleigh has read."

"By all means, let us [illegible] war," urged Mrs. Hicks hurriedly. (Mrs. Domeleigh's paper was entitled, "Comic Forces as Known to the Ancient Alchemists.")

"In the first place," said Mrs. Hicks, to make sure no one did, start to discuss Mrs. Domeleigh's paper. I cannot understand why the Russians are committing suicide."

"Are they?" asked Mrs. Snigg[illegible]

"My dear, don't you read [illegible] word?" exclaimed Mrs. Hicks.

"Of course," retorted Mrs. Snig[illegible]

"Then," continued Mrs. Hicks, "you must have read how the Russians, about fifty thousand of them, took poison!"

"Dear me, I missed that," confessed Mrs. Snigg[illegible]

"Of course those newspaper reporters are so careless. In the paper I read it said 'Russians Take Poison,' but I knew they left out the 'T.'"

"How droll!" murmured Mrs. Peters.

"Isn't it?" gurgled Mrs. Jenkins, who, as presidentress, felt bound to have her share of the say.

"Why so many nations should fight I cannot understand," said Mrs. Snigg[illegible]. "There must be twenty of them."

"Mr. Hicks told me this morning there were only eight"——

"I am afraid Mr. Hicks was occupied with his Fall boosting of coal prices he does not follow the news," [illegible] Mrs. Snigg[illegible].

"Do they increase the price [illegible] You know all my intimates buy theirs in a single lot in the early Summer when it is cheap. If one can afford to pay cash [illegible]."

"But there must be more than eight nations fighting," Mrs. Jenkins put in hurriedly to save any trouble.

"Count them: Germany, [illegible] Belgium, Russia, Austria-Hungary, Servia and Japan," said Mrs. Hicks boastfully.

"Oh, possibly at the start, but now," explained Mrs. Snigg[illegible] "now there are oodles of nations. You see [illegible] and Finland [illegible] Poland and Scotland and Ireland and Wales and Luxemburg and Andorra and Australia and Hungary [illegible] you see, all of Europe, between Berlin and China and that smart little country, the Zulu [illegible]."

"My, my, that's fourteen more [illegible] that makes twenty-two countries in all!" exclaimed Mrs. Phipps.

"It is expected that Turkey, [illegible] Catend, Bulgaria and other nations will mix before long," continued Mrs. Domeleigh.

"It is so funny that neither France nor Germany has thought of making a rear naval attack. They could sail their big battleships around by the way of Switzerland and end the war within a couple of days"——

"That's so!" agreed Mrs. Snigg[illegible]

"I [illegible] they won't march to Paris," said Mrs. Jenkins, "and destroy [illegible] splendid 1915 dress patterns."

"But some of our dressmakers have got back. They have seen them and so we will get perfect copies," Mrs. Snigg[illegible] exclaimed, "and before long [illegible] those new half-long cloaks"——

"And [illegible] hats"——

"With [illegible] pannier effect, they are coming back"——

"A [illegible] in [illegible] made up like that"——

"Mo[illegible] [illegible] in greater demand"——

"Not [illegible]."

And [illegible] members of the Homeville Women's Club dropped their discussion of the war then and there for a far more important topic.

Did You Ever?

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

DID you ever hear Josh Billings? He said, "Did you ever kiss a man 2 fall on the ice? If you did get up and praze the Lord."

Here are some of "Did You Evers" Josh didn't mention:

Did you ever cut your tongue while "licking" the flap of an envelope? Ouch, with a giggle, "How droll!"?

Did you ever try to lower a balky window and have the bottom sash [illegible] your finger against the screen-sash and remove the nail and [illegible] "Now I lay me"?

Did you ever stand in the street, watch a surface car approach and try without hesitating and then say, "What a jolly motorman!"?

Did you ever have a woman three feet wide sit down beside you in the car in an eighteen-inch space? And did you at once exclaim, "Oh, you cute little rascal!"?

Did you ever go to the ice box for a night lunch and have a quart milk bottle slide out on your slipperless foot, and promptly close your eyes and say, "For what we are about to receive make us truly thankful"?

Did you ever [illegible] eating, discover you had forgotten pipe and tobacco, and then say, "Ah, how I love to commune with nature!"?

Did you ever wake up the next morning wondering where all your money went, and when [illegible] lead like a German dirigible and a mouth like a brass [illegible] full of powder [illegible] alum, and exclaim, "How thankful I am that I have so much time ahead and such good sound common sense"?

Did you ever—if you are a lady—see another lady pass by wearing more jewels and a better dress, and say to your companions, "How I wish I was as young and beautiful as she"?

Where He Quit.

HE had worked for the farmer nine years as a hired man and was apparently contented until his employer added poultry raising to his list of activities. Then the hired man had to write on each egg, with an indelible pencil, the date and the name of the hen that laid the egg. One day the man marched up to his employer and announced: "I'm going to quit."

The farmer was astonished. "Why are you going to leave," he asked, "after working for me all these years?"

"Well," said the man stoutly, "I've done pretty near everything about this place now, but I'll starve before I'll go on being secretary to your darned old hens."

Insulted.

IT was his first pair of long trousers, and he felt very pleased with himself as he swaggered boldly into the local boot emporium.

"I want a brand-new pair of boots," he announced, as a smart young man came to attend to him.

"A pair of kids, I suppose?" asked the ever-obliging salesman, referring to the quality of the leather.

The youngster turned his nose up coldly, swelled his chest to its full proportions, and, fixing a stony stare on the young shopman, replied, indignantly:

A Dirty Job.

"JUST look at the wonderful color of the sea!" exclaimed a tourist on his first Mediterranean cruise. "See how blue it is!"

"It's not strange," growled a traveler who had lately run the gamut of the Neapolitan pensions and was therefore disillusioned. "No wonder it's blue. You'd be blue yourself if you had to wash the shores of Italy!"

Took Him at His Word.

A BROAD street man tells of a typist in the office of a friend of his. She was a refined girl of good family, and so was all the more distressed by the cranky and rather discourteous manner of her employer when he took exceptions, as he often did, to her deficiencies as a typist. Her patience, however, seemed unlimited, until one day recently.

The boss turned up in a grouchy mood. "Look at my desk," he roared. "Everything in confusion!"

"But, said the typist, "you have often told me not to touch your desk."

"Well," he said, somewhat mollified, "I don't want you to touch my papers, of course." Then, as his eye fell upon a sheet of postage stamps, he began to roar again. "Look at those stamps! I don't want them there!"

The typist took up the stamps.

"Where shall I put them?" she asked.

"Anywhere! Anywhere!" shouted the boss. "Anywhere out of sight!"

"Very well," said the girl, as an ominous flush came to her cheeks. And she gave the stamps a rapid lick, stuck the big sheet on his bald pate and departed in search of another job.

Consolation.

A DEPOT agent in a certain small town in Minnesota had inherited an amazing degree of that useful, consuming curiosity of which womankind is generally supposed to have a monopoly.

Some time ago a box containing a Belgian hare in transit for the West was dropped at the station. When the agent saw the cloth across the box move he started an investigation.

No sooner had he loosened the cloth sufficiently to enable him to peep into the box, than Mr. Belgian Hare, like a flash of light, was gone from the box and out of the depot. The agent gave chase. At a lively rate of speed the two went across the railroad tracks, and toward the lake, the hare several paces in the lead. The agent's position was embarrassing, but it was up to him to recover the hare, and he kept on running. At times he seemed to be gaining a little. Suddenly, just at a most exciting time, he stubbed his toe and fell. When he picked himself up, Mr. Hare had disappeared from sight over a rocky ledge. The agent stopped short, with a look of distress on his face, and a laborer returning from work heard the following remark fall from his lips:

"Run, darn you, run! You don't know where you're going, anyhow! Your address is on the box at the depot!"

Where He Could Find Out.

AN Edinburgh cabman was driving an American around to view the sights of the northern city. In High street he stopped, and, with a wave of his whip, announced:

"That is John Knox's hou

"John Knox!" exclaimed the American. "Why, was he Brief Speeches.

"THERE are many motorists on a Washington driver, "who cannot speak as fast as they can drive. In fact, I have noticed that we are, as a rule, wretched speakers. In connection I recall a dinner at an automobile club in Detroit. A well-known automobilist was assigned at this dinner the task of presenting a silver cup to another no less well known. Both had plenty of time to prepare addresses, but the best the presented could do was to extend the cup and stammer

"'Here's the mug.'

"The other rose in his turn. His speech consisted of

"'Is that the mug?'"

"Old Mammy's" Reply.

THADDEUS STEVENS, slavery's most fiery enemy, though at times he could dominate his party could not always control his tongue.

While in Congress he had, as cook, an old Southern negro "mammy," who, alone of all the household, stood not in awe of the great statesman. Like all her race, she was devoutly religious, and, though she worshipped her employer for his zealous efforts on behalf of her people, she never failed to take him to task for his intemperate language.

One day she accidentally let fall a trayful of dishes. Stevens, hearing the crash of chinaware, lost his temper and his tongue.

"What's all that you're breaking in there?" he asked, angrily, adding many additional words that shocked the aged "mammy." Coming to the door, she looked the angry man squarely in the eyes, and shot at him:

"Whatever 'tis I'se breakin', it ain't de fo'th commandment."

"Why you no brought 3 or 4 of those here?" are bright question for me.

"Lavesdripper. Return to kitchen duty!" they holla together, like chorus girls. Yet I heard more from other keyholes.

FRANK FARRELL, the owner of the Yankees, was visiting Montreal early this year and passed a large park that enclosed a magnificent massive structure. It was such a beautiful place that Farrell couldn't resist the temptation to enter the park. He had gone about fifty yards when he met a uniformed person, who was busy arranging a flower bed.

"Pardon me," said Farrell, "but will you kindly tell me what this wonderful institution is?"

"The State Lunatic Asylum."

"Many foolish people here?" inquired Farrell.

"Over a thousand, and they make me sick."

"Why don't you get a nicer position?" persisted Farrell, "you're a big, strong, healthy individual."

"I would, but I can't get out."

Farrell gave one look at the open entrance, another glance at the man and got out as quick as lightning.

"Why you poor boob," Matty said, "don't you know what he means when he calls you a bee? Simply that you buzz from one bush to another." That quieted Brady for the few days he stuck around.

'TWAS only a few days ago that the Giants managed to beat out the Pittsburghs in a twenty-one inning game by a score of 3 to 2. The game was protested, and the decision of the league heads is still in abeyance. The protest is over the umpire calling Hans Wagner out in the sixth after he crossed the home plate. That little episode proves that old Honus always works with his noodle and is still the same sly fox.

It seems that in the sixth Hans was camping on third. Suddenly the bow-legged Dutchman started for home. Meyers in avoid the ball at Stock, but it bounced and hopped under Wagner's arm. Instead of dropping the ball at once, Hans kept on his way and a few feet from the plate let the ball slip to the ground. The entire Giant team was over near third hunting for the sphere, when Wagner got rid of it. He was called out for interference, but it is possible that the decision might be reversed.

THE Yankees in the last few years have tried out quite a number of catchers. One of them was turned back last season, and the local papers commented thusly at the time of his release: "He needs more experience."

Manager Joe Kelley of the Toronto club, to which the backstop was turned back, used him behind the bat regularly the first few days after he reported.

But the catcher failed to shine. He was especially weak on foul flies, running circles around them and waving his hands like a freight brakeman.

He made a particularly wild stab at a high twister one day in Newark without getting it. This led a fan back of the plate to shout:

"Hey, busher, you don't need more experience. You need a basket."

Some umpires have no regard for the welfare of recruit players. A third baseman was breaking in with the Red Sox a few years ago. The team was to play the Athletics the next day. The "rookie," desiring to get all the information he could on the opposition, asked the umpire of the day for a bit of advice.

"My arm is all right," said he to the umps, "but I often find that, hurry as I will, I am unable to get my man at first on a bunt or a slow roller."

"Why," imparted the arbiter, "you probably play deep. Whenever you expect a bunt, sneak up with the pitch."

This umpire saw the "rookies" about three weeks later in Boston hobbling on crutches. The umps had missed him from the daily box scores and thought he had probably been turned back to the "brush." He asked the youngster what had happened.

"Mr. Umpire," he said, in a rueful tone, "I took your advice. I started on "Home Run" Baker, but I woke up in the ambulance convinced that I never was cut out to be a third baseman."

Fred Snodgrass fell victim to an injury about the time Hank O'Day, then an umpire, began having trouble with his eyes. O'Day's case had been diagnosed by an eye specialist while Snodgrass's physician had advised an operation on his knee.

While unable to play Snodgrass was sent to coach. O'Day was working the bases and a number of close decisions had gone against the Giants on the paths during the game. Snodgrass, when O'Day rendered an unusually close decision against the Giants, yelled:

"That specialist made a mistake, Hank, when he looked you over. He should have pronounced you stone blind."

Quick as a flash O'Day retorted: "Yes, and if that surgeon knows his business he will operate on your head instead of your knee."

"And "Snow" hiked back to the bench as fast as his lame knee would permit him.

For a while last season the Pirates carried around with them a fresh recruit. One day Clarke had occasion to send him to bat for a faltering pitcher.

"Who are you batting for?" asked Umpire Klem as the tyro approached the plate.

"Why, myself, of course; who did you think I was batting for?" snapped back the youngster.

Klem raged. A minute later Clarke sent Booe to bat for another weak member. Klem took off his mask and asked the lad: "What is your name?"

"Booe," politely answered Booe.

"Don't you boo at me," shouted Klem. "I'll boo you to the bench. What's your name?"

"Booe," repeated the player.

"To the bench, you fresh busher," yelled Klem. And it took Clarke several minutes to explain to Klem that Booe was his real name.

"Chick" Fraser, one-time Cub pitcher and a sort of Nemesis for the Giants in his day, is now scouting for the Pittsburgh Pirates. When he was first assigned to the position of ivory hunter, Barney Dreyfuss gave him a list of players to watch, and "Chick" started for the Northwest to look over the embryo stars.

To this Dreyfus responded: "Didn't want Mamaux; wanted Pappa of Spokane."

Two days later Fraser came back with: "Have bought Peppa also. Fellow named Childs out here. Want him, too?"

The trials and tribulations of a pitcher breaking into the big leagues are vividly recalled by "Jeff" Tesreau of the Giants. The other day Tesreau was asked if he was scared when he pitched his first big league game.

"Scared!" scornfully replied Jeff. "I should say I was not. I was perfectly cool and in possession of all my faculties out there. Not once did I think of the crowd or the magnitude of the job and responsibility on my shoulders.

"But the funniest thing in the world was that I couldn't keep my knees still, for they kept swaying and rocking and knocking together all through the game. But I certainly was not the least bit scared."

"Silk O'Loughlin has always borne a reputation for veracity.

It was a game in Worcester, Mass., that a batter claimed that he had been nicked on the arm by a pitched ball. O'Loughlin, in his despotic way, refused to let him take his base, contending that the ball had not touched him.

The player, an outfielder, stuck in the game for the two innings still to play. Next day the arm pained him so much that he was forced to seek medical relief. The physician examined him and told him that his arm was broken.

"You must be wrong," said the player. "My arm can't be broken. 'Silk' O'Loughlin told me the ball never touched me, and 'Silk' claims he never made a mistake in his life."

Hadn't Killed Him.

THERE is a certain young man who used to be notoriously egotistic. Some of his acquaintances were one day speaking of him before an old lady who was not "up" in the slang expressions of the day.

The next time she met him on the street she put out a congratulatory hand.

"Oh, Mr. Smith," she cried, "I am so glad you are better. I heard last week that you had a swelled head."

Worthy of Sherlock Holmes.

DR. A.—Why do you always make such particular inquiries as to what your patients eat? Does that assist you in your diagnosis?

Dr. B.—Not that, but it enables me to ascertain their social position and arrange my fees accordingly.

MRS. CARMAN, IN JAIL, CRIES: "MY HEART IS BREAKING"

"I Do Not Care if They Found a Hundred Pistols; I Did Not Kill Mrs. Bailey," the Doctor's Accused Wife Declares

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—"This charge is murder itself. My heart is breaking. If they keep me here long they will have another dead woman on their hands and that woman will be myself. I do not care if they found a hundred pistols; I did not kill Mrs. Bailey."

This statement and appeal came from the Mineola, L. I., jail, where Mrs. Florence M. Carman is held on the indictment for first degree murder as the slayer of Mrs. Louise B. Bailey.

The Freeport physician's wife sees no one but her husband and her attorney, George M. Levy, and no statement other than that quoted has been forthcoming from the woman who, for the second time, faces trial in connection with the mysterious shooting on June 3 last in the doctor's office.

District Attorney Smith says he will endeavor to have the date for the trial set for the second week in October, and Mrs Carman is reported to have requested that there be no delay in bringing the criminal proceedings against

BAILEY DEATH GUN FOUND.

The discovery of a 38-calibre revolver under the flooring of the barn behind the Carman residence at Freeport led to the first degree murder indictment it is announced by District Attorney Smith.

The revolver was found by a detective in the employ of the District Attorney. The investigator ripped up the flooring and found the weapon encrusted with new rust, but still in good working order.

It is the theory of the District Attorney's office that the murder weapon was placed there immediately after the murder and before suspicion was directed against the wife of the Freeport doctor by the discovery of the dictograph and the revelation of her jealousy over her husband.

A new witness secured by the District Attorney, a carpenter named Smith, identified the weapon as one he had seen in the Carman home. He declared positively that the weapon he saw was decidedly that type, as he had examined it closely.

Dr. Carman was called before the Grand Jury and questioned in regard to the weapon. He swore that there had never been a weapon of that type in his home and he could not account for its presence in the barn.

LONG SEARCH FOR WEAPON.

Search for the Bailey murder weapon has been carried on intermittently by the police of Freeport, detectives from the District Attorney's office and Burns' operatives ever since the murder. It was the one missing link in the prosecution's chain of circumstantial evidence against the Freeport matron.

The house had been searched many times and magnets had been lowered between the inner and outer walls Ponds in the vicinity were dragged with no results.

The District Attorney has no theory as to who hid the revolver but he is convinced that it is the weapon which sent the bullet into the breast of Mrs. Louise Bailey as she was about to leave the office of Dr. Edward Carman.

Two other important witnesses for the prosecution will be produced against the accused woman, District Attorney Smith announced. He added that they had fully corroborated the stories of Cecilia Coleman, the colored maid, and of Frank Farrell, the tramp. He also said that the maid had added to her statement and had greatly strengthened Farrell's story.

The Leading Lady in "Peg ... Heart," Formerly in Come... Entered "Legit" Last Year

Florence Martin, the sweet and ingenuous leading woman whose rich brogue and ready wit delight us, has let out this stage secret. I had lunch with Miss Martin the other day and would have had a most enjoyable tete-a-tete if one Frank Bruner, manager of the show hadn't endeavored to stage manage the interview.

Miss Martin looks better to me off the stage than on. Her hair is not red, it is black, and her complexion is not too florid as grease paint makes it for the footlights. She is a nice, sweet little girl, and it must be an effort for her to be so fresh and pert as Peg in the show.

Although appearances may be deceitful for Miss Martin is Irish, and her off-hand manners may come natural to her.

I was born in Dublin," said Miss Martin. "My mother's people came here, and my mother has that nice Irish accent. My father came from the North and its the strangest thing although I am always with mother whenever I use a brogue as Peg is in the northern brogue that I am compelled to speak."

Frank Bruner thought that was enough and ordered lunch. "Let's get along with this interview," he urged.

"What's the matter with this interview?" I demanded. "It's good enough for me and for Miss Martin!"

"It doesn't hurt me a bit," replied the lady tossing her head and making her eyes flash. "Did I mention her hair?" Florence Martin has very large eyes. I think they are blue, but I not sure. Anyway they are mischief and laughtinx-loving Irish eyes, they match her sweet smile."

Playground as Bait for Sunday School

A playground, with swings and seesaws for the children of the neighborhood, has been established in the rear of the Baptist Church, Weymouth. This innovation is part of the work which this church is carrying on among the children. The pastor, Rev. C. J. Underhill, believes that children will come to Sunday School if they are provided with a playground during the week.

CUPID LISTENING ON THE TELEPHONE SNARES 4 HEARTS

Two Weddings to Complete Romances Which Began Over the Wire.

Two Boston romances in which Cupid's role in the wooing and winning of two switchboard girls was "by telephone" came to light yesterday with the engagement announcements of Miss Emma ... Miss Clark was stationed at the North Station exchange of the ... and is exchange supervisor at Hyde Park.

The wedding is promised for early this Winter.

In Miss Leonard's case Cupid sat listening at the wire when Mr. McQuade one night called for the Hyde Park supervisor. He was having trouble in getting a business call, Miss Leonard straightened the snarl out, but not before Mr. McQuade had been impressed with her voice and the way in which she accomplished results. The result is to be a wedding October 14, in recognition of which event a number of telephone girls at the Hyde Park exchange gave Miss Leonard a tin shower at the home of Miss Pauline Packard, No. 72 ...

The first wireless message which [illegible] the leper settlement [illegible] apparatus will be a message of [illegible] from the inventor of wireless communication, Marconi. The inventor when told of the project was delighted, and stated that he would be pleased to send the first message. The message will come through the station on the Filene building.

One Lone Girl Among 30,000 Employes

HUB APPLICANT SHATTERS RULE

FIRST TO GET ON BIG PAYROLL

American Express Co. Surrenders

It [illegible] been for a determined young [illegible] girl who scorned an [illegible] rule barring all women employes [illegible] American Express Company [illegible] workers, would [illegible] on its payroll. Miss Margaret Daley has changed [illegible].

[illegible] ONE WOMAN worker [illegible] American Express Company now [illegible] one. Her [illegible] the [illegible] the first woman [illegible] placed there.

Never before in the memory of the [illegible] among the tens of thousands of American Express workers has a woman before drawn a salary from the company.

WOMEN NOT WANTED has been [illegible] hard and fast rule.

One morning Miss Daley entered the office of the Boston assistant general manager, C. W. Robie, at 43 Franklin street, with a letter. Mr. Robie is one of the most up-to-date human express-efficiency machines in this part of the country. He has few rivals anywhere.

"Well," he looked up from his desk.

"I have a letter for you." The words were directly spoken; the gray eyes of the speaker looked squarely into those of the big manager.

Mr. Robie took the letter and read it hastily.

"Uhuh!" He rubbed his chin, smiled, [illegible] glanced up. "M-m-m-m! Didn't you know, Miss, that we NEVER employ women here?" he asked.

"It's time you did," said Miss Daley.

"Your letter is quite satisfactory but it's one of the rules of our concern that no women shall be on the payrolls."

Miss Daley opened her mouth to answer [illegible], then shut tight her white teeth and, with a bow, walked out of the big man's leather upholstered sanctum.

But she didn't give up. A week later she came back with another letter, an even stronger letter than the first one—and there was a reason. Somehow it had leaked out that "the man higher up," the newly chosen head of the big American Express Company, George C. Taylor, who succeeded J. C. Fargo, June 16, coincident with the taking over of the National and Wells Fargo companies, favored the admission of women employes.

Miss Daley, though, had ideas of her own about that. She wanted the job—a stenographer's job—and when it came to getting what she goes after, Miss Daley has a winning way.

The result—well, today it's the wonder of thousands of American Express male employes scattered all over the world.

The appearance of the name MISS MARGARET DALEY on the weekly pay roll has taken all the wind out of the sails of the anti-feminine contingent. It's the last straw for them.

"Now that the bars have been let down others will be sure to follow," is the general observation among the male workers.

Miss Daley just smiles when she hears that.

"What next? [illegible] of us will be losing our [illegible] women," is another frequent [illegible]. Miss Daley says she doesn't [illegible] see any man made to give way for a woman, BUT——

At present she is the only woman among the [illegible] New England employes [illegible] MAY be other women later, [illegible] Daley features the job now.

Even the telephone operators at the Franklin street switchboard are men, and [illegible] good operators, too—but where will you find in Boston men filling positions at private telephone switchboards except in the American Express Company's office.

Miss Daley is the pioneer.

Maybe she will be the first and the last woman on the express job in Boston. For, as you know, there has hitherto been a strong tide against her and her sex.

For instance, one of the cut and dried axioms of the American company during the days of President J. C. Fargo and one which has impregnated its very atmosphere for years has been:

Here's another:

> Every time a woman gets up from her desk, three men look up from their work.

"Men need no mirrors," is another owl-like habit which years ago sifted down from the head office through the different departments.

> Female Tears Do Not Correct Misspelled Letters.

But listen to this:

> There Is But One Woman Who Doesn't Presume on Her Sex—She's Dead.

It would be pretty hard for Boston women to be serene and at their highest efficiency in an office where a placard bearing such a legend, if not on the wall was emblazoned in the "atmosphere":

> Kitchens and Boudoirs Are Made for Women—Offices Are Made for Men.

"Here is one place where women are not wanted," declared a prominent express official.

"Since Mr. Taylor's appointment as president, there has been a change of heart towards women. He believes that women workers will do—but that doesn't signify that this old custom will be shattered—not by any means. He has been president since June 16 and yet we have but a single woman employe in New England. That is, in three months' time but one woman has secured a job."

"I'm not a suffragist, not a prohibitionist, nor a physical-culturist, nor a scientist, nor anything like that, but I'm a thorough believer in women's ability," says Miss Daley.

"Perhaps other women besides myself will have a chance to 'show the company' soon. There are certainly a nice lot of men here. Everybody is courteous and polite and pleasant—the old rules barring women do not seem to have spoiled anyone's disposition. Maybe there's chance for

Why the American Express Company Didn't Want Women

Cheap at first; costly at last.

MEN need no mirrors.

Kitchens and boudoirs are for women; offices for men.

NEW FRESHMAN DORMITORIES AT HARVARD READY

[illegible] the installation of $40,000 worth of mission wood furniture into Standish and Gore Halls, the Harvard freshman dormitories, [illegible] past week the new apartments in readiness for the class [illegible]. College opens September 28. [illegible] of the Harvard faculty all men who enter college this year [illegible] subsequent years must room [illegible] of the three new dormitories, [illegible] their homes are in the vicinity [illegible] university, and then only when Assistant Dean Henry A. Yeomans grants them permission to reside outside.

Standish and Gore Halls are built on three sides of a court, which [illegible] toward the river. Smith Hall [illegible] a quadrangle similar to the [illegible] quadrangles at Oxford and Cambridge. The rooms in each are arranged in suites intended to accommodate from one to seven men each. All bedrooms are single and every [illegible] is provided with a study and a [illegible]. The rooms are all furnished and a scale of prices has been adopted which will make the average annual rent nearly $75 less than that [illegible] paid by freshmen.

More than 125 men can be accommodated in rooms costing less than $100 per man. In certain cases a man of very limited means may enjoy [illegible] own private bedroom as well as a share in a study and a bath for $[illegible] less than $1 a week. While the buildings are wired for electric lights and telephone service, the use of these is not included in the rent. [illegible] Every building contains a dining room, suggesting in construction and furniture the old halls of the English colleges and a common room, leading almost directly out of the dining room, with fireplaces and the usual furniture and equipment of a club reading room. Board will cost $5.25 a week.

[illegible] special rules have been made by the faculty with reference to living and discipline in the halls. In every hall there will be a resident member of the faculty, chosen because of his fitness and desire to assist freshmen. There will also be a number of proctors in each building.

The erection of the freshmen dormitories has been one of the pet projects of President Lowell since he became head of the college. He believes that so many young men of all classes of society thrown together will establish a more democratic spirit among the students as a whole. Democracy has ever been a watchword of the Lowell administration, and no stone has been left unturned that will lead to a more common understanding between all the different classes and types of men that go to make Harvard a national educational boiling pot.

General Curtis Guild will make an address. Commanding officers of the several States will sit at the Governor's table.

The Governor's Council and staff will also attend.

What Cadum is Made Of

Cadum, the well-known remedy for Eczema and other skin troubles is one of the very few preparations sold in drug stores that is not secret. A list of its ingredients is printed upon every box. One ingredient is oil of cade, which is recognized by doctors as being one of the best things known for Eczema. Another ingredient is zinc oxide, which dries up the water that forms upon sore [illegible] on the skin. Two other ingredients are petrolatum and white wax, which make a covering to protect these sore spots from the air and water. A trial box of Cadum can be secured in any drug store for 10c, but it is cheaper to buy the 25c size as it contains nearly four times as much as the 10c box.

BRAVES LOSE, 4-3, BUT LEAD PENNANT RACE BY 2 GAMES

GIANTS BREAK EVEN IN PHILLY

McGraw's Men Lose First Game, 1-0, but Come Back and Slam Out 8-0 Victory Over Phillies in Second.

Fromme Is Invincible in the Final Contest; Holds Phillies to Pair of Hits, Which Are Secured in Closing Innings.

By DAMON RUNYON.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 12.—One step forward, and one step back, such was the hair-lifting gait of the New York Giants in the double-header with the frayed Phillies here this afternoon. They lost the first game by a score of 1 to 0. They won the second by a count of 8 to 0.

Thus they are only a little worse off than when they rose to greet the sun this morning—only a little.

The sensation of the occasion was the hurling of Arthur Fromme, the celebrated Red refugee, in the second game. After a long illness, considerable period of general ineffectiveness, and one thing and another, Arthur bobbed up in the shank of the afternoon with a fierce bid for a no-hit game.

Two Quakers were out in the eighth before Arthur strolled the semblance of a blow, and then it had to be the pitcher who gathered the same. That was indeed tough luck for Fromme! Only one man reached second on Arthur and mighty few reached first.

FROMME A SENSATION.

With the Phillies hopelessly defeated the crowd was pulling for a no-hitter, but auch was not to be Fromme's. Buoying must have been a source of great gratification to McGraw, however, if it has not come too late.

With one out in the first frame, Neals Becker, the Wichita Breeze, drew a pass from Arthur, but was put stealing.

In the fourth, with one out, the former Giant again walked, but Magee fanned and Cravath forced Becker at second. Technically Cravath reached first though when he forced Beals it made the third out.

In the seventh, with two out, Cravath walked, but Byrne lifted a fly to Dashiell.

Arthur Fletcher had to make a sensational stop and throw on Martin in the sixth to put it off a bit, but he made the play in grand style. It was the busiest bit of ball of the game up to that time and it made the second out of the inning. Immediately afterward Fromme passed Byrne, and then Marshall bunted sharply to

Red Sox Held Up by Rain, but Gain on the Athletics

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12.—The opening game of the Red Sox-Washington series was postponed today on account of wet grounds. Two games will be played here on Monday.

Although Boston loafed it gained a half game on the Athletics, as the latter were beaten by the Yankees in New York, 2 to 1. This leaves the Hub aggregation only seven and one-half games behind the leading berth in the American League.

World's Series to Start Oct. 9

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The first world's series game probably will be played on Friday, October 9. Secretary John Heydler of the National League stated today that a report that October 10 had been chosen as the date by the National Commission was erroneous.

The commission has made no decision," he said, "However, I am pretty certain that the first game will be played October 9. Both leagues end their season October 7. There is no reason to wait three days before starting the first game. The teams will rest on the eighth and no doubt begin playing on the ninth."

If New York and Philadelphia are contestants in the world's series the games will be played in the two cities on alternate days. If Boston represents the National League the jump to and from Philadelphia will be so far that the first two games will be played in one city and the next two in the other. A toss of a coin will decide which city will stage the first two games.

Harvard Captain Wins Golf Title

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—E. P. Allis III, captain of the Harvard team, a Milwaukee boy, who won the amateur title of the State of Wisconsin for the third time, won the title of individual champion of the Intercollegiate Golf Association by defeating a promising young Princeton student, L. M. Washburn, over the Garden City links today in the 36-hole final. Allis won by 11 up and 10 to play. At the finish of the first half of the 18 holes Allis was 10 up on Washburn.

CHANCE QUITS AS HEAD OF YANKEES

"Peerless Leader" Quits in a Huff, Declaring That a "Grandstand Cabinet" Has Interfered with His Work as a Manager.

Chance Quit Cubs After Row with Murphy; and President Farrell of New York Has Had Trouble with Six Managers Now.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Frank Chance, whose high standing in the world of baseball is based chiefly upon his record as manager of the famous Chicago Nationals ("Cubs") team of six years ago, resigned as manager of the New York Americans today. Chance himself made public the fact that his resignation has been submitted, and President Farrell of the Yanks later verified the fact that it had been accepted.

Two reasons are given for the resignation of the "Peerless Leader" as he is frequently termed. Chance claims that a grandstand cabinet interfered with his authority over the team so that the scouts made no secret of Boss Stallings' eagerness to build up the Yankees into a pennant winning combination.

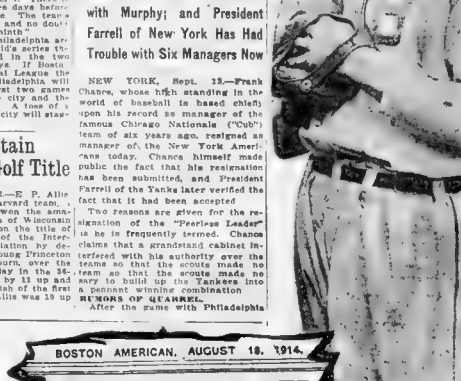
'No-Hit' Davis Breaks All Records

Rich Law Student Baseball Hero



"GEORGE DAVIS, WHO PITCHED A NO-HIT GAME ON HIS DEBUT —AND HOW A BOSTON AMERICAN PREDICTION WAS FULFILLED

DAVIS, ON HIS DEBUT, JOINS THE "BIG THREE" IN THE PENNANT BATTLE.

By NICK FLATLEY.

A rookie pitcher clinching a pennant sounds like fiction, especially if that rookie is a youngster well off in the goods of this world, who plays baseball because he just naturally can't help it.

But that's the story of George Davis, the no-hit, no-run hero of the Braves. Unknown a few weeks ago, the young fellow today is the most talked of ball player in the country.

GREAT HELP IN PENNANT FIGHT.

From the present outlook, he is the man who will make the championship for the Braves more than a mere hope. His first real trip stamps him as a second Ed Walsh, or perhaps an even greater "spitball king."

He's the trump card that Stallings, "Miracle Man," manager of the Boston Braves, will play to make the National League flag a certainty.

The Davis family is wealthy, and George might have elected to follow any career that hit his fancy. He knew baseball, liked it and consequently, when the chance offered, chose it as his profession.

LOVE HALTED PROGRESS.

His story reads like a magazine yarn.

Taken fresh from college onto a big league team, he was on the road to success when love interfered and rather than give up marrying the girl of his heart, he jumped the New York Yankees in the Spring a year ago and was married.

He was then banished to the minors. Now he's back in the big show and to stay, anew has made himself famous as no rookie before him ever did.

He started out as star pitcher for the Williams College nine. The way he trounced Yale, Georgetown and all the other big knowledge aggregations put the scouts on his trail.

When he was graduated the New York Yankees signed him up.

All through the season of 1912 he was on the New York bench absorbing baseball knowledge. He did no pitching just sat there taking it all in.

He learned from Russell Ford just how that famous spitball was hurled. He didn't try to use it himself but all stored away.

SENT TO MINORS.

When the season of 1913 rolled around the college chap was taken to Bermuda by Frank Chance, who is successful Harry Wolverton as director of the New York outfit.

Davis did not stay long in Bermuda. A couple of years before he had met Miss Constance Jones, a Wisconsin Rudolph girl. The pair of them named March 1913, as the month in which they would be married. The young pitcher left for baseball fellows and returned to Buffalo. Miss Jones became Mrs. Davis.

Bruce Chance has a chronic dislike for imitation against letting his young players jump away and take to themselves the pastures.

Though Davis had informed his boss that he was going to take the important step, the "Peerless Leader" grew peeved. Forthwith Davis was

BROOKLYN COMES UP WITH A RUSH AFTER 7 SCORELESS INNINGS

Tyler Pitches Almost Invincible Ball Until the Eighth, When the Dodgers Fall on Him and, with the Aid of an Error, Tie the Score—A Triple and an Accident Give Them the Winning Run in the Ninth Inning.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

The Braves sailed along with a three-run lead until the eighth inning yesterday at Fenway Park, and then with a man on first, Maranville fumbled a grounder from the bat of Dalton. Daubert followed with a two-base drive to the bleachers, and Myers, batting for Stengel, slashed the ball down the left field foul line. Three runs came in and the score was tied.

In the ninth inning Cutshaw tripled to the bleachers and scored on a squeeze play. This run gave Brooklyn the game, 4 to 3, and caused the Braves to lose ground in their battle for the National League pennant. Our boys still have a lead of two full games over the Giants, their nearest rivals, this state of affairs being the result of a split double-header in Philadelphia.

The defeat of the Braves was the greatest disappointment to the 16,000 fans who flocked to Fenway Park. The Stallings men appeared to be going along so easily, and the three runs they had acquired looked so good that not one of the spectators thought anything could happen to beat them out.

George Tyler was sent to the box and much was expected of him, as he had not pitched since Monday. He started off well, keeping the hits so well scattered that the Brooklyns could get but one hit in each of the first five innings. In the sixth and seventh rounds the visitors were retired in the easiest possible manner, not a man reaching first. The blow up came in the eighth and it came so quickly that the "fans" were aghast.

After Cutshaw's three-base drive in the ninth, Tyler was taken out of the box and James, who had hastily warmed up, took his place after a little delay. Gets was up at the time and on the first ball pitched the Brooklynes unexpectedly pulled the squeeze play.

GETS BUNTED PERFECTLY.

Gets bunted perfectly as Cutshaw came tearing in for the plate and James in fielding the ball stumbled and fell to the turf. While lying down he attempted to get the ball to the plate, but the throw was wild and Cutshaw had no trouble at all in scoring what proved to be the winning run.

The runs made by the Braves, which looked so big up to the time of the crash, were the result of considerable luck. Gowdy reached first on a fumble and took second on Tyler's base on balls. Maran then drove a line hit to right and Stengel got in its path, shoved down his hands and waited for the ball to come along. When it did arrive it didn't stop, but bounced right through Stengel's hands and over on the right field fence.

Stengel turned and chased the pill at full speed, but before he could get to it and throw it back to the plate all three runners had scored.

BRAVES FOUGHT HARD.

The Braves looked rather dead in the first part of the game, but as the battle progressed they gingered up a lot, especially after they got their three runs. They fought it out hard to the end and made Aitchison pitch a game one in the ninth round. Everyone of the Braves that faced the Brooklyn hurler got on him for three and two but all three were retired.

Smith, Maranville and Gowdy turned in some fine plays for the Braves, while the visitors' chances were for the most part easy ones.

The same teams will meet on Monday and Tuesday.

Brooklyn began the first inning auspiciously. Dalton laying down a perfect beauting Tyler's throw by inches. Daubert then put Dalton on second but a moment later Daubert booted a third strike foul and retired to the bench. Tyler struck Stengel for a strike out and when he beat it up by retiring Wheat on an easy grounder in the last half of the round. Whitted then lined the ball to left centre for two bases and took third on a wild pitch. Gets threw out Cather while holding Whitted on the bag. The Rabbit fanned.

TWO BASES FOR GETZ.

With one down in the second, Gets doubled to centre, Cather muffing the ball after a hard run. The next two batters were easy. In Boston's half Schmidt fanned, Smith flied to Wheat and Mann grounded out.

In the third Daubert singled to centre after two were out but died stealing.

The Braves threatened in the last

Great Detroit Outfielder Shows It is Almost Impossible to Throw a Game.

Ty Tells How American Team Failed in Attempt to Lose to Cubans.

By TY COBB.

(Written Expressly for the Sunday American.)

Baseball's absolute honesty, which is generally believed in by the public at large but doubted by a few so-called "wise guys," is being proved in a most convincing manner right now.

It is a well known fact that the majority of the players in the National League are "pulling for" the Braves and that Stallings' club would be a very popular champion. Probably 90 per cent. of the men in the game would rather see the courageous Hub boys cut into the world's series coin than anybody else. Yet you will notice that nobody is throwing any games to the Braves. On the contrary, every manager is using his best pitchers against them and the opposing players do not hesitate to wallop the ball or make brilliant fielding plays even when to do so means the loss of a game for Stallings.

Sentiment is a very pretty thing off the field, but it has no place on the diamond after the umpire has called "Play ball!" So all the support the Bostons are getting from the other clubs in the National League is in the form of good wishes and not good deeds. Maybe some fellow playing the outfield secretly hopes that a Boston batter will break up the game with a long hit, but, all the same, if that hit happens to come into his own territory he will make every possible effort to grab it, even if he runs the risk of crashing into a stone wall or sliding on his ear to connect.

DIFFICULT TASK TO THROW GAME.

It would be the hardest thing in the world for a big league player to throw a game, even if he wanted to, I think. There is a story told of the visit of a "big time" aggregation to Cuba one Winter and of an effort being made to toss off a game, only to have an outfielder gum up the plot by a brilliant catch.

I do not vouch for the truth of this yarn and can't think of the name of the club said to be involved, but it is worth repeating just to show how it becomes a sort of second nature to a man to make all the plays he possibly can.

The story is to the effect that the American players thought they would beat the unsuspecting Cubans out of some money by framing up to [illegible] game and betting on themselves. The Cuban fans are "dead game sports" and will back their Havana [illegible] outfits to the limit to beat a Yankee team, or at least they [illegible] at one time, and I do not [illegible] that they have [illegible].

AMERICANS TOOK LEAD

This time the Americans did not have any [illegible] their bets down on the [illegible], for they had [illegible] the islanders and some of the professional gamblers were "off" the home talent. The big leaguers [illegible] considerable quantity of [illegible] and talked it up [illegible] they would [illegible] the game look like a real contest by playing to keep even or ahead [illegible] about the eighth [illegible].

It happened to be one of those tough games wherein [illegible] have it all over the batters [illegible] Americans managed to get [illegible] off the Cuban flinger [illegible] didn't break their necks [illegible] any more. Probably [illegible] have made them anyhow [illegible] ing was great. Had [illegible] pulled any very [illegible] crowd would [illegible] so they went [illegible] eighth, [illegible] the Cubans [illegible].

Unfortunately, the only chances offered in this [illegible] it would have been [illegible] given to have booted [illegible] of them, [illegible] clubs went into the last half of the ninth with the score 1 to 0 in favor of the Americans. Then the visiting pitcher was instructed to pass a couple of men, which would bring the heaviest batter on the Cuban team, a man who was likely to [illegible] one at any time.

To make [illegible] sure the pitcher [illegible] groove and [illegible] the nose [illegible] trip, and victory [illegible] but the American [illegible] forgetting all about the [illegible] fact that he had bet [illegible] the Cubans ore across the [illegible] made what was said to be the [illegible] sensational one-hand catch ever se[illegible].

BRAVES WINNING ON MERITS.

The runners [illegible] started to tear around [illegible] an easy matter to [illegible] play and [illegible] Americans [illegible] lemon outfit [illegible] of the thing [illegible] had avenged [illegible] spared.

This story doesn't [illegible] a recital of fact [illegible] asking my readers [illegible] repeat it merely to [illegible] is a very strong force [illegible] gets used to playing [illegible] probably would be [illegible] framing anything raw [illegible] in the park would be [illegible].

Stallings isn't asking for [illegible] help, of course, and he wouldn't [illegible] do anything crooked, even if [illegible] which want him to win [illegible] town. You may be sure that every game from now on [illegible] season will be a fight if either New York or Boston is in it and the race will be run on its merits. Some of the second division teams may loaf a little while playing each other, but they will put their best foot forward when grappling with the leaders.

In the American League almost everybody would like to see the Red Sox beat out the Athletics. Some of the players are sore on the Mackmen for their attitude toward the players' fraternity and their refusal to be a party to the threatened strike. Others think that the Quakers have had a strangle hold on the world's series money long enough and would rather see the Boston Americans grab it. But you can bet that we will all be trying just as hard to down Boston as to beat the Athletics.

'NO HIT' DAVIS MAKES HISTORY

In that circuit he didn't do much. He pitched occasionally [illegible] with [illegible] success. But evidently he showed something. At all events, the subtle baseball brain of George Stallings conceived the idea that Davis would be just the man for the Brave team, with which he was going to surprise the baseball world. So he bought the chap from the Skeeters.

Davis, however, had other plans. His father, George A. Davis, had built up a comfortable fortune by practice of the law. The athletic son wished to follow in the footsteps of his sire. So he entered Harvard Law School last fall.

JOINS THE BRAVES.

With the coming of summer though, the baseball spirit manifested itself. When [illegible] course of studies had ended George joined the Braves, then in last place. Back in June he pitched a game and was beaten, 7 to 2, by the Phillies. The Boston team was then in the ruck [illegible] the fielding as much as the pitching [illegible] counted for the defeat.

Shortly after, the "Big Three"—Rudolph, James and Tyler—started [illegible] ball games. Davis seemed [illegible] to be traded or kept on the [illegible].

[illegible] however warming up [illegible] Fred Mitchell, Davis tried that [illegible] he had copied from Russ [illegible] Boss Stallings, who sees everything that happens while his charges are racing as well as playing, was [illegible] over to the pair.

"Let's see that spitter again, George," he ordered. Another delivery and Stallings and Mitchell, who coaches all the Brave pitchers, went into consultation. It was decided to make Davis a spitball pitcher.

He came through rapidly and long before the Braves left on their last Western trip Mitchell was urging Stallings to start a game with Davis. But the "Big Three" were working well and "The Boss" refused to shift.

QUICK JUMP TO FAME.

With every day the elusive bender, as exemplified by Davis, took on a greater "hop." Finally, when the crop of double headers had made [illegible] recruit a necessity. Davis was sent out. It was Wednesday.

Less than two hours after he had [illegible] his first ball—a strike—across the rubber, the young pitcher was famous. He had entered the exclusive no-hit, no-run class.

What's more, he had proved that he was game to the core. In one inning the first three men up were passed. A rescue pitcher was sent to the bull pen to warm up. But the Brave recruit merely grinned.

He turned round to Captain Johnny Evers, who had nervously headed for the box.

"All right, Johnny," he said, with a care-free smile, "I'll get them."

Then he waved back Hank Gowdy, who, like Evers, had started for the box, and began to pitch. He fanned the first batter on four pitched balls. The next, a pinch hitter, he forced to roll an easy grounder that the redoubtable Maranville, Evers and Schmidt converted into a double play.

ALWAYS THE MASTER.

After that it was plain sailing.

Through that long game there was nothing that faintly resembled a hit. The Philly batters, hardest hitters in baseball, saving possibly their fellow citizens, the Athletics, were helpless. Sluggers like Cravath and Magee were missing the ball by a foot. The "[illegible] Ed Walsh," as Stallings christened the rookie before he had showed his skill, jumped both feet right into the list of the pitching wonders of all time.

Davis is a cool, methodical sort of [illegible] who keeps his wits about him at all times. He didn't even know that he had held the enemy hitless till the game was all over.

[illegible] keep track of the hits [illegible] and when they come [illegible] the end of the game [illegible] safe blow, generally [illegible] nervous that they lose [illegible].

Not Davis, however. He was in [illegible] Philadelphia and it made little difference to him how that great feat was accomplished, so that it was.

He has the perfect temperament for the successful pitcher, and besides, is gifted with great physical strength. During his course at Williams he was the strongest man of the college. He can, if need be, go in and pitch every other day from now till the end of the season without suffering at all.

BASHFUL SORT OF CHAP.

With all his fame, young Davis is a bashful sort of chap. He refuses to discuss his great performance save to remark:

"I just went out and pitched, that's all."

Baseball with the new hero of the diamond is a matter of pastime. His father, who was formerly a member of the New York Senate, has a comfortable fortune. George could pursue his course at law and never miss the income baseball brings.

He's a natural athlete, however, and declares that he will pitch as long as he's able to make good and then turn to the law.

Unlike the fathers of most of the famous baseball lights, the senior Davis has no objection whatever to his son's diamond proclivities. Matter of fact, he approves heartily and has several times this season journeyed over to Boston just to watch the Braves play, in the hope that his boy might be given a chance.

Perhaps, too, the great friendship that exists between Manager Stallings and the father of the pitcher marvel, has a lot to do with the anxiety that the leader of the Braves displayed to have the chap make good.

BOSS FATHER'S FRIEND.

When Stallings was managing the Buffalo team of the International League, Senator Davis was one of George's greatest pals. What time the ball field did not call for the presence of the "Miracle Man," he spent at Lancaster, a suburb of Buffalo, where the Davis home is situate.

Naturally, when a scion of the Davis family threatened to become a big league ball player, Stallings would spare no pains to help the cause along.

However, what brought it about, George Davis has arrived, strong.

He may be the star who will bring the Braves into the most unexpected championship in baseball history. If, though, he never does another thing in baseball, he has made a name that will live as long as the game does.

"Spitball George" Davis is twenty-four years old and knows March 29 as his natal day. He is rather short—some 5 feet 7 inches—and his general appearance would never stamp him as an athlete and a strong man. But he has a wonderful muscular development and is constructed to stand a lot of hard work. He'll very likely get it, too, before this hectic season comes to a conclusion.

JOHNNY EVERS DECLARES BRAVES WON'T 'CRACK' SAYS: 'THAT'S THE TROUBLE WITH NEW YORK'

Boston Has a Bunch of Youngsters Who Won't Feel Strain Like Giants, Who Have Been Through the Mill Too Often

Braves' Captain Declares That the Cubs Are Likely to Be More Dangerous Than the New Yorkers Near the End of the Race

By JOHNNY EVERS.

Captain of the Boston Braves.

While it's far too eary in the race to make any out-and-out pennant predictions, there's no doubt that just now the Braves look like the best bets in the National League circuit.

There's a whole lot of talk about our team cracking, but every ball player in the country knows that a team made up like ours is not at all as liable to blow as an outfit that has gone through several pennant fights and world's series.

The reason is simple. Players like the Braves stars have never been on a team that has fought its way through to a flag.

Consequently they have no idea whatever just how great the strain is. I know. I've played on four pennant teams, and been through three big series. Believe me, it's some pull. No matter how long you've been in the game, it gets you.

That's what the trouble with the Giants is today. They have been through the mill and the players realize what's ahead of them. There's no way of telling just how you feel when every day means a game with a whole year's money perhaps depending on it.

TOUGH FIGHT AHEAD.

I never was inclined to be over-nervous, but in each flag fight I came pretty near being worried to death. The same applies to every other player that went through with a pennant winner. And looking forward to that desperate finish is the one thing that is likely to affect the gamest player that ever swung a bat.

Not having been through it, there's nobody on our outfit that'll do any blowing up, unless I do. And I feel just as good now as ever I did.

There's a long, tough fight ahead, though. New York is still very much in the race, and so are the Cubs. In fact, I think O'Day is likely to prove a whole lot more dangerous toward the end than McGraw.

The Cubs have pitchers going along well, while the Giants have nobody but Matty and Tesreau. The Cardinals, too, are not far enough out of it to be overlooked. A whole lot can happen in a few weeks, as our climb to the top showed full well.

But the Braves look good to me because the team is getting better every day it plays ball. The young fellows are getting onto the inside stuff, and that's what helps in close games. When we started on our climb we had plenty of raw material. That material has been welded together slowly but surely and now the Braves play team and good inside ball every minute.

MARANVILLE A WONDER.

It would be a mighty hard thing to say just which of the players deserves the most credit. Take any one on the list and you can find a hundred things to commend him for.

Maranville is a wonder, pure and simple. He has won game after game with his bat and saved many a battle by his sensational fielding. He is picking up baseball wisdom all the time and will mighty soon be in a class by himself, if he isn't there already.

Butch Schmidt on first has come along splendidly, and is today one of the best all-round ball players in the business. Red Smith has been a great help with his stout hearted hitting ability and his steady fielding. Charlie Deal, his understudy, likewise deserves a lot of praise for the swell way he went through early in the fight, sick and crippled as he was.

In Hank Gowdy we have one of the best catchers in the game. He can carry a pitcher along in wonderful style, is a fine hitter and a great backstop. And Bert Whaling is a mighty close second. Whitted has demonstrated almost unequaled ability as a filler in and a rescue hitter.

Connolly is today a star outfielder and one of the best hitters in the business. Herb Moran is playing better ball with us now than he ever did before. Mann is a brilliant fielder and can murder any left-hand pitcher. Josh Devore has more pep than he ever showed with the Giants and has his batting eye working again. Larry Gilbert has been on the hospital list, but is a slashing good ball player and will be heard from before the season ends. Cather can jump in any time and hit and field just as well as the man he replaces.

SOME GRAND PITCHERS.

As for the pitchers, it would be wasting words to try and give the Big Three any boosting. They don't need it. Everybody in Boston knows what they've done this season.

Perhaps, too, the sensational way that young Davis came through the other day won't help the team along. And Strand is ripe now and will be ready to take a regular turn. He has showed by the number of tight games he has pulled through in the closing innings that he has the stuff. He's game as a pebble and has proved it. Otto Hess is also in line to bring home a few games for us when we need them.

Cocreham, Crutcher and Cottrell [illegible] have the ability and with George Stallings and Fred Mitchell steering them along, are all on deck to help out if there be any necessity.

So much for the players. Each one of them is a game, earnest individual. They all have the fighting spirit and, win or lose the pennant, will deserve all the credit in the world for the great fight they've put up.

Of course the main secret of the whole success has been George Stallings. I have seen managers by the dozen in my playing days, but the "Wonder Worker," as they call him now, is the best ever.

As to what may happen in the remaining days of the season there's a long, hard row ahead. [illegible] chances, however, look very favorable for us. We have, ever since the spurt started, showed that we can hold our own against any kind of game.

FIGHT TO END END.

The long stretch at home will be a wonderful help. There's no city in the world where the crowds are more loyal and willing to overlook slips. In that we have an advantage over the Giants, who, slumping, as they have been, will not be any too enthusiastically supported by the New York fans.

We have quite a few double-headers ahead of us, but we have the pitchers to face them with plenty of confidence. And here again fortune favors us. The Giants have several more dual bills on their hands than we have, and are in a bad way for pitchers, even if they were playing nothing but single engagements.

The Cubs, as I have said, look mighty tough, but now we have a good margin on them, and they have to do the most of their playing from now out away from home.

Boston can be satisfied that the Braves will go right through fighting to the bitter end, and that there will be no crack. We may not win out, but we'll come mighty close to it.

And if we do finally win, it sure will be the most startling achievement in all the history of baseball.

Johnny Evers to Get Greatest Prize in History of Baseball

Captain Johnny Evers, the star second baseman of the Braves, will receive more money for playing ball this season than any other ball player ever has been paid in the history of the game or than any other athlete ever received in one prize except the purse Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries received at Reno. When the Braves signed him, he was given a bonus of $25,000. His salary with the Chicago Cubs, calling for $10,000 a year, with $2,000 extra if the team finished first, $1,500 if second and $1,000 if third, was assumed by the Boston management. Consequently, if the Braves win the pennant his year's total income from baseball will be, approximately:

Salary	$10,000
Bonus for signing	25,000
Bonus for finishing first	2,000
World's series cash, at least	2,500
Extras, advertising, writing, etc.	2,000
Total	$41,500
And if the Braves win the world's series (additional)	1,500

Yankees Beat the Mackmen

POLO GROUNDS, New York, Sept. 12.—The first game of the series between the Yankees and the World Champions brought out a crowd of 10,000 enthusiastic fans. The present series with the Athletics will be the farewell meeting for the Yankees on the home grounds.

The game was a 1 to 0 victory for the Yanks up to the ninth, when Sweeney's wild throw let in a run for the Athletics, tieing the score.

The first man up was Sweeney in the New York inning. He smashed a home run into the right field stands, winning the game. The pitching by Bender and Keating was superb, each allowed seven hits. The score:

PIRATES TWICE BEAT THE CUBS

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sept. 12.—The Pittsburgh Pirates this afternoon took both games of a double-header from the Chicago Cubs by scores of 5 to 4 and 4 to 0.

The Cubs engaged in a spirited batting rally in the last inning of the first game and came within one run of tieing the score. Johnston, who ran for Corriden, stole second and attempted to score when Coleman's throw went into centre field. His out ended the game.

In the second game Humphries proved easy and Cheney was just as soft in the only inning he pitched.

The Cubs got but two men to third base, Bresnahan in the third and Leach in the ninth. Score:

FINAL RUSH IN THRILLING NATIONAL LEAGUE BATTLE FINDS BRAVES UNCRACKED

By NICK FLATLEY.

Little more than three weeks of the baseball season are left. With twenty-six games still to play, the sensational Braves lead the champion Giants by two full games. They show no signs of cracking.

For more than two months now their climb has been gradual. During the past six playing days they gained the two games which they now boast as their lead on the McGraws.

TWENTY-SIX YET TO BE PLAYED.

When the Giants came here Labor Day morning for that well known double-header, the two fighting teams were even up. Like the Braves, the Giants still have twenty-six games to play. In their case, too, most of the games are scheduled for the home ball yard.

The Giants' hurlers seem to have had a partial return to championship form in the past few days. Matty, Tesreau, Marquard and also Fromme looked mighty good on their last appearances.

Yet despite this fact, the Braves were able to pick up two games in the course of a week's battling. If there be any favorites in the greatest race in history, the Braves would seem to be the logical ones.

With the "Big Three" and sensational "Spitball George" Davis to go through down to the finish, it will not be the lack of good pitching that will keep the pennant away from Boston.

Trouble in the shape of Brooklyn, which team proved yesterday that it still has some kick left, looms ahead of the Braves for a couple of days. Then for a three-game stop arrive the Cardinals. The Braves have beaten them seven times in their last eight games. Cincinnati arrives here Saturday.

But still greater bother hangs on the Giant horizon. After three more battles with the Quakers, the pesky Cincinnati Reds make a flank attack on Gotham. They play three battles.

It was these same Reds who brought the Giants back to where the Braves might be in reaching distance little over a month ago, when they took four of five in a series at New York. They repeated the dose when the leaders, at that period, hit Redland on their final western trip.

The Cubs by doing a double flop yesterday practically put themselves out of the race. They have now dropped back into fourth place, some six battles behind the Braves. And the Cards returned to third have five and a half to make up. A long outside chance is about all that remains for either of the outfits.

The battle stands as follows today:

	W.	L.	Behind Leader.
Braves	73	55
Giants	71	57	2 games
Cardinals	69	62	5½ games
Cubs	68	63	6 games

What makes the Brave outlook bright gazing ahead is the fact that the big guns of the pitching staff are ready to shoot.

Rudolph tomorrow, James Tuesday, "No hit" Davis Wednesday and Tyler Thursday appear like a fairly reliable squad to depend on. Tyler has been beaten his last three appearances, but nevertheless pitched well enough yesterday till an unfortunate error gave the enemy a chance to break through.

Maranville's Error in the Eighth Session Enables Dodgers to Tie Score.

half but did not come through. Gowdy led off with a single. In trying to sacrifice Tyler, popped a foul to McCarthy. Moran walked. Whitted's out put Gowdy on third and then Cather fanned.

The fourth saw a near-Brooklyn run. Wheat tripled to the bleachers with one down, but got no further than third as Cutshaw fanned and Getz popped to Whitted. In the last half the Braves went out in order.

Egan opened the fifth with a safe one to centre, but was doubled up on McCarthy's grounder to Whitted. Aitchison grounded to Schmidt.

In Boston's half Gowdy got a life on Egan's fumble and Tyler was passed and then came the explosion. Moran drove a safe liner to right and Stengel allowed the ball to roll through his legs. Before he could get back to the diamond Gowdy, Tyler and Moran had crossed the plate. Whitted and Cather both retired on grounders to Egan.

After the Rabbit had fanned in the last half Schmidt whipped a single to left and was followed by Smith, who put one in the same direction. Mann advanced the runners when he nearly knocked the pitcher down with a hot one, but was thrown out at first. Gowdy was purposely passed, filling the bags. Tyler hit hard to the box, but they got him at first.

It was one-two-three for the Dodgers in the seventh, Tyler pitching fine ball. In the second half Whitted got on through a pass with one down, but was doubled up with Cather.

Egan grounded out in the eighth. McCarthy then singled, and after Aitchison popped to Whitted McCarthy took second on a wild pitch and third on Maranville's fumble of Dalton's grounder. Daubert pasted a two bagger to right-centre, scoring McCarthy. Myers, batting for Stengel, slashed a single down the left field foul line, scoring Dalton with the tieing run, but was thrown out trying for second on the hit.

In the last half Maranville flied to Wheat, Schmidt grounded to Daubert and Smith flied out.

With the crowd on edge the ninth opened. Wheat was out on a grounder to Whitted. Cutshaw drove the ball to the bleachers for three bases. Tyler was derricked and James went in to pitch.

The Boston infield closed in. On the first ball pitched Getz laid down a bunt and James slipped, throwing wild to the plate to catch Cutshaw. The run came in and Getz made second on the poor throw. James issued a pass to Egan. Gowdy made a fine catch of McCarthy's difficult foul. With "3 and 2" on Aitchison the latter was called out on strikes.

The Braves were one run to the bad when they took up their bats for the last half of the ninth. Mann flied to Dalton. Gowdy was called out on strikes. Dugey batted for James and was out, Egan to Daubert, ending the game.

By WALTER CAMP.

(Written Expressly for The Sunday American.)

The Harvard-Michigan game, which will be played at Cambridge the last day of October, will have results far more wide reaching than any contest for many years, as the general public, no matter what the justice of the conclusion, will certainly determine the merits of Eastern and Western football by the results of that contest, and if Michigan wins the impression will obtain that Western football could for many seasons have defeated the best in the East.

On the other hand, if Harvard wins the majority will conclude that a similar result would have occurred had the teams met any time in the last five or six years. This is in a way somewhat unfair, for while Michigan has lost Craig, one of the best half backs of East or West, Harvard will retain Brickley and Mahan the former the man who scored all of Harvard's points against both Princeton and Yale last year with his drop kicking alone. Yost for Michigan is a first-class coach, and he can be relied upon to turn out a good team at any time. He has lots of drive and his men play with dash and abandon.

Haughton for Harvard has proved himself, and his teams have been steady and reliable. With Brickley to shoot drop kicks it is not necessary for the Harvard team to have an unusual attack. As long as they can get Brickley up within scoring distance, and last year he was always dangerous from the forty-yard line, their chances are good.

GAME SHOULD BE THRILLING AFFAIR.

Michigan will have to make up for this by a variety of attack, and Yost fully appreciates the situation. Altogether it should be the best October contest that we have ever had in the East.

Another meeting that will bring the West and East together, while almost too early to see the real calibre of the teams, will be the Yale-Notre Dame contest at New Haven on October 7. Notre Dame had a wonderful team last year which simply swept West Point off its feet and around up with a [illegible] down in Texas.

It is understood that they have lost their quarterback, Dorais, one of the best little men of 1910. Their however, should not militate greatly against them, as the team was individually well equipped and [illegible] having lost most of its line through graduation will find it very hard sledging against these veterans and will have to rely upon backfield work.

Here on [illegible] Notre Dame team should well equal them and it looks as if the New Haven men would have to get down to business the latter part of September if they propose to hold these Middle Westerners on that date

NEW ATHLETIC PLANTS.

Two new athletic plants will be opened this Fall. The Princeton Stadium given by Mr. Palmer will surely be ready for the Yale game on the second Saturday in November, and unless all signs fail, the Yale "bowl" will be the scene of the Yale-Harvard match on Saturday, November 21. This "bowl" is one of the most impressive structures that has ever been erected on any athletic field and those who have not seen it will be surprised at its magnitude. It is true that the full quota of seats will not be available until next year, but the general effect of the structure will not be seriously militated against by this condition, for the entire outside of it will be finished and already the turf has been grown along the sides so that from the outside the "bowl" looks already as it will at its completion. It is far more [illegible] than the Harvard Stadium and while much less imposing in height gives the impression of far greater magnitude. It will seat, when completed, 60,000

MARTIANS OF THE GRIDIRON.

There is a chance that the season of 1911 will see two men in football contests who might well be called the "Martians of the Gridiron." The two men are Dorias and Flynn.

Flynn, it will be remembered, had a meteoric but rather depressing season of football in New Haven ending in matrimonial adventures, and the consequent eclipse of his light as a shining star of the Middle Atlantic States, but in spite of all this Flynn is a most remarkable athlete. At that time he was [illegible] mature and more or less spoiled on account of his superiority, physically and athletically to other schoolboys, yet in the early games at New Haven and in the practice it was evident that the man had remarkable possibilities

To those who have not seen him on the gridiron let me say that he is something over 6 feet 4 inches, weighing well over 200 pounds and with all that can run 100 well inside 11 and down, it is said, to 10 3-5, besides being a remarkable high jumper.

All this might be passed over were it not for the fact that he naturally likes football and has an excellent use of the straight arm in the ability to hold off a tackler while he runs rings around him. As a kicker there is no one on the field today who can hold him in distance

He is a left footed punter and in the Yale-Harvard game the year he [illegible] made one kick from his goal line of 70 yards. It is said that he is going to take up [illegible] of the minor teams this year and if he does and the plays [illegible] work out for him to give him a [illegible] opportunity as they never were at New Haven, we shall see some star work.

DORIAS ANOTHER STAR.

Dorias [illegible] of the Martians [illegible] The other one [illegible] of the Gridiron is a man who [illegible] Dorias, but such a [illegible] the wrestling [illegible] and practically cowed [illegible] who faced him into submission and that, too, without the use of [illegible] measures. He has been [illegible] upon as a possible football [illegible] time and for a big, [illegible] remarkable amount of [illegible] and knack, and the question [illegible] whether he can be taught the [illegible]

If Coach Bruce Dodge [illegible] he can and gets him into his [illegible] until the [illegible] has sufficient [illegible] we shall see some remarkable work. In fact if he had begun according football knowledge a few years before he would undoubtedly by this time have been one of the stars of the forward line up for no man he meets can hope to equal him in physical strength and power, and that, too, in an available form.

With these two Martians made good Every member of the football world is going to watch them with especial interest.

Slippery Track Prevents Feature Race at Revere

After several unsuccessful starts, the one-hour motor paced race at Revere was called off last night because of the poor condition of the track. The oval was damp and proved unsafe for the race will be ridden tomorrow night.

The riders started, but after going a short distance Waltham received a bad toss. Fearing further danger Wiley then gave up and was followed by Fullman and Mitten

Fred Herbert of Fall River was a double winner in the amateur events, capturing first place in the half mile handicap and five mile open. The summary

WALTHAM CRUSHES MARLBORO ELEVEN 33-0

By OTTO B. HANSON.

The scholastic football season was officially opened when the Waltham High eleven scored a 33 to 0 victory over the team from Marlboro High at Waltham before nearly 3,000 spectators.

The Waltham players were in much better condition and their speed in the first two quarters was too great for the Marlboro boys to overcome and all of the scoring was done in these sessions. For the first game of the season the contest was very interesting and well played and both teams showed possibilities

The Marlboro boys had two chances to score but on the first they were fumbled and on the second a forward pass fell incomplete

The Waltham team has a wonderfully fast backfield. These men were the entire strength of the team yesterday. They carried the ball well, hit the line hard and have [illegible] formation that are good

DELAYED RUSH A SUCCESS.

A delayed buck through [illegible] for the first touchdown [illegible] worked by the Waltham backfield. Healy crossed the Marlboro line twice for touchdowns, the forward pass with the quarterback, fullback and either end handling the ball and gained much territory, although several passes fell incomplete.

The Waltham line was rather weak and Coach Harry Dame will have to put much more fight into these players. They did not charge well and did not give their backs much help in making gains, but on the defence proved fairly strong

The Marlboro boys were in no condition to put up a hard battle. With but two days' practice the boys barely learned their signals and taking this into consideration did very well in holding the Waltham team down to such a small score. During the last two periods the Waltham team was unable to score.

The feature of the Marlboro play was its tackling. On several occasions the visiting players broke up the Waltham plays by slashing into the

With more strength in the line, Waltham will have a team that will rank high with the best school elevens. The backfield will be a hard one to beat. Captain Richardson at fullback, Miller and Parent at the halfback position and Healy at quarter played wonderful football and each and they are bound to improve as the season progresses.

Healey runs the team in grand style, put a lot of [illegible] into his [illegible] and is a sure [illegible] for the ball. Richardson does the punting for the team and yesterday got off some kicks for good distances.

Waltham kicked off to Marlboro but on the first play it could be seen that the visitors were weak on the offence. Waltham got the ball here and then Delaquine was forced to punt. Paul Leary recovered the kick but was downed in his tracks. Miller went around right end for 60 yards to Marlboro's 15-yard line and Captain Richardson carried the ball over for the first touchdown of the season. Richardson kicked the goal. Score—Waltham 7, Marlboro 0

Marlboro kicked off and the speedy Waltham backs made first down on four consecutive times by straight football, and then Richardson punted outside. On the first rush, Marlboro fumbled and Waltham recovered the ball on Marlboro's 25-yard line. Waltham was penalized five yards for off-side play, but then successfully pulled a long forward pass, Healey to Richardson to Leary, that netted the second touchdown. Richardson [illegible] goal [illegible] Waltham 14, Marlboro 0

Marlboro kicked off to W[illegible] 45-yard line. A forward pass was [illegible] fell short and Marlboro [illegible] the ball on the [illegible] yard line.

Here the first period ended [illegible] second period started with Marlboro [illegible] the ball on its [illegible] and on the [illegible] put the ball to the [illegible] gain kicked the goal [illegible] Waltham 21, Marlboro 0

Healy was the hero of the final touchdown, although Meriam, a substitute end, scored. Healy ran the kick-off back 20 yards. Richardson punted to Marlboro's 15-yard line and the visitors lost the ball on [illegible] forward pass, Healy to [illegible] son to McGann, scored [illegible] kicked the goal. Score—Waltham 33; Marlboro 0. The ball came with this score

The third and fourth periods saw the teams battling fiercely [illegible] neither side scoring. Both teams appeared to [illegible] strength during the intermission and field Waltham. The team [illegible] end, and but for a fumble [illegible] ball on the 3-yard line would have scored

Football Starts at Harvard Tomorrow

Half Hundred Expected to Answer First Practice Call. Seven Regulars in Squad.

The call to football arms will be sounded at Harvard tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, when the Crimson starts preparation for the 1914 campaign with the brightest of prospects.

The candidates—a half hundred are expected to answer the first call for mobilization—will be met at the Locker building by Head Coach Percy D. Haughton and Captain Charles E. Brickley. After each man has registered he will get into moleskins and out onto the practice field.

TWO PRACTICE SESSIONS DAILY.

The first afternoon out bids fair to be as rugged as any of the other matinee sessions during the opening week. There will be tossing of the medicine ball, crawling, falling on the ball and half a dozen other ways of preliminary preparation, ending with a jog around Soldiers Field.

Starting Tuesday, the squad will go two shows a day, one in the morning under Captain Brickley, and the other after dinner with Coach Haughton himself directing proceedings. This rule will hold in force until Friday, September 25, the day before the opening game with B[illegible]

To uphold her fine reputation of last season Harvard has still enrolled in the ranks seven of the eleven men who started her on her victorious parade over Yale on Soldiers Field last November, and she has but half of the team of eighteen men who had a hand in the humiliation of the Blue foemen.

GILMAN INELIGIBLE.

Of the regulars Frank O'Brien, end, Captain Bob Storer and Rex Hitchcock, linemen, have gone out into the world. Storer's running mate at tackle, Jim Gilman, although expected back in college, will be ineligible for the eleven.

Bill Dana, George Bettle, Bud Willetts, Lou Mills and Vin Freedley of the substitutes to get into the Yale [illegible] have been graduated, but the entrance against the New Haven team was more of a compliment to the many laborious hours they turned in to help develop the regular machine rather than to any great ability on [illegible] the single exception of Freedley will [illegible] at Cambridge this season.

Harvard's problem positions this Fall should all deal with the rush line with vacancies open at guard, tackle and end. The positions that will probably give the Crimson coaches many thoughtful days and restless nights will [illegible] surprised even his most ardent ad[illegible]

BUSY SEASON FOR BRICKLEY.

Captain Brickley, easily the best all-around football player in the history of the gridiron, will be used this season more than Mahan or Bradlee, his running mates. Not only will he do the drop kicking, the specialty which has done most to call him into the [illegible] limelight, but when a gain is sought through the enemies' bulwarks it will be the Everett youngster who will be shot into the opposition's line.

Wendell, when playing his best, had nothing on Brickley's work at line-smashing last year. Last season [illegible] around gaining play [illegible] through [illegible] formation and [illegible] per cent of her plays were run from this offence.

The "fake kick," as this play is more popularly known, allows a mad dash around the ends, stiff plunges through centre, long forward passes, and the opportunity is always there for [illegible] goal kick. Mahan was called upon for most of his yard-gaining sallies from this point of vantage.

"WHEEL SHIFT" TO BE USED.

Fred Bradlee's work will be confined mostly to playing on the defence. The celebrated "wheel" shift that Haughton showed to such advantage last year will again be in evidence at Cambridge. The legality of this play has been questioned several times, but the officials who have handled the contests where the question arose have declared it was perfectly legitimate.

Bates will open the season in the Stadium on September 26. The Springfield College Y. M. C. A. team shows a week later. Washington and Jefferson [illegible] its bow before a Boston audience on October 10. The Washington and Jefferson boys held Yale to a scoreless tie last Fall. Tufts and Penn State are to be met on later Saturdays.

Harvard will meet Michigan on October 31. Princeton and Brown follow [illegible] with the classic meeting of the football year, the [illegible] with Yale closing the season. This contest is booked for November 21 at Yale's new stadium, which, it is claimed, will seat 70,000.

HARTE LOOKS LIKE STAR.

"Tack" Hardwick, who was shifted [illegible] should develop into a consistent performer this season, although his handling of the spot last Fall was nothing startling.

Dick Harte is being groomed for the breach on the other outskirt, made by Frank O'Brien's graduation. Harte is the ideal end in figure and [illegible] thorough overhauling [illegible] coach [illegible] develope into [illegible] end rusher on the team.

Harte is an all-around athlete, playing on his freshman team as well as on the nine. He will be a few days late in reporting, as the Crimson has cited him as a member of its intercollegiate tennis quartet, which on Tuesday starts in the championship tourney in Philadelphia [illegible]

HARDWICK MAY GO TO TACKLE.

Both Storer and Gilman have departed [illegible] job [illegible] to worry Harvard men just a wee mite. "Tack" Hardwick may be given a flyer at the hangout in some promising end material hoves in sight.

A youngster who is apt to hear some watching, not only from the enemies side of the line, but also by his rivals, is "Big George" Caner. Caner is the finest type of [illegible] listed at Harvard since H[illegible] day. He measures 6 feet 4 [illegible] and weighs about 185 pounds [illegible] a star on his freshman [illegible] last year. Other tackle candidates are Homer Sweetser and Rob Curtis.

"Stan" Pennock, the All-American guard, is sure of steady employment this Fall. Walter Trumbull may be shifted to a guard place also, leaving "Ernie" Soucy in undisputed possession of the centre [illegible]

Lou Berman and Dave Duncan, the 1917 guards, are built up along the Pennock lines, each weighing about 190 pounds, with a height of five feet ten inches. If they have the "heart," either one of these boys is apt to break into the big games of the season.

CRIMSON "STRONG MAN" OUT.

Johnnie Bigelow, Fred Wellington, Bill Underwood and Oran G. Kirkpatrick, the Harvard strong man, are other candidates for the three positions ranging about centre. Frank Wigglesworth, who won his letter against Yale two seasons ago, may also make a try for the eleven this year, provided his injured back will stand up under the strain.

With the great Brickley, the speedy Mahan and the stout-hearted Bradlee holding forth behind Harvard's rush-line, no other contenders stand a ghost of a chance. Injuries may upset all calculations, however, and among the men who will endeavor to worm themselves into a place in that select trinity are "Tuk" Rooms, "Blink" McKinlock, "Doc" Wallace and Messrs. Harris, Ames and Douglas of the 1917 backfield.

Crafty Mal Logan has [illegible] rivals for quarterback "faded" at the start. Logan, in addition to possessing many other qualities necessary to football play and generalship, has a "great head" and knows how to use it. His work against Yale last November

BROWN WINNER OF GOLF PLAY AT WOODLAND

Semi-final and final matches in three divisions and an open handicap [illegible] competition in which sixty players competed brought the three-[illegible] tourney at the Woodland [illegible] a successful close.

R. W. Brown, of Meadowbrook, won [illegible] disposing of S. K. Sterne in the morning and then beat[illegible] winner J. N. Manning, [illegible] the 18 hole final in [illegible]

[illegible] the day was good, Brown scoring approximately 77 for both of his trips around the course which brought him victory on the home green in the morning and at the 16th in the afternoon.

Brown [illegible] Manning [illegible] 1 up at the turn, where the latter started going, and won the next three holes in succession. From a bad slice into rough grass Brown recovered perfectly at the 13th and by holding a 10-foot putt for a 3 became two up again.

This proved to be the turning point in the match. Manning lost the next hole, halved the 16th and pluckily holed a 20 footer for a 3 at the 16th, as [illegible] possible chance only to have Brown put down an 8 footer and settle all questions for the day.

J. M. Clark, of Mt. Tom, and E. McCarthy, of Wooland, were the respective winners of the second and third flights.

E. O. Loring, of Newton, won the par tourney being two down to his unseen opponent. It was rather a strange thing that out of 60 players only nine had courage enough to turn in their cards.

GOLF

By H. P. FARRINGTON.

ONE of the most unusual rules for golf is what is called "preferred lie." At the Brunswick G. C., in Maine, a new course has been started, and at present it is not in the best of shape. Through the green, where the average tee shot would carry one, is long grass and [illegible] driven into the ground, marking an area of supposed fairway. A ball within [illegible] may have what is called a "preferred lie," the player electing where he will place his ball for the second shot.

• • •

THE play-off for the Brae Burn Holiday Cup resulted in a win for [illegible]

C. L. BECKER was welcomed by a large number of the Woodland members when he put in an appearance at his home club recently. It seems that a farm in New York state is keeping the golfer busy and that the only practice he has had is with lick shots with a hoe at some of his new potatoes.

LAST week G. H. Lyall lowered the amateur record [illegible] the [illegible] course held by himself from 72 to 68. The par of this pretty nine hole course is 38, so that Lyall's rounds of 35 and 3[illegible] [illegible] appro[illegible]

Par—5 4 4 4 3 5 4 5 4—38.

In—3 4 3 3 2 4 4 [illegible]—34—6[illegible]

THERE are few men who get more fun out of a round of golf than E. W. Fiske, who follows the tourneys from one end of the country to the other. He has greatly improved his game in the last three years, due to his earnest and conscientious practice. He is not a long player but has developed his short game so as to counteract the disadvantages of not being able to drive 300 yards.

THE new holes that will add considerably to the attractiveness of the Commonwealth C. C. seem to be coming along very fast, and I understand they will be used in the course of the next month or six weeks to try out their merits. It seems too bad that the greens on what will be the new first and second hole appear to be altogether too small. Considering the contour of the land where the tee shots will land on, it will make the dropping of a ball on them a matter of more than ordinary skill.

• • •

TWO open tourneys the coming week will attract the local golfers. The Merrimac Valley C. C., which has a Fall meeting annually, and the Newton G. C. each have a handicap medal play event scheduled. Gross and net trophies are offered the successful candidates.

MOTOR TRADE IS IN HEALTHY CONDITION

Every Reason to Believe That the 1915 Season Will Be Prosperous One.

By J. C. KERRISON.

Many captains of the motor industry visited Boston during the past week. All of these men occupy a position to the front in the motor industry not only in the production of the newest improvements but in the commercial end of the business. Their visit to Boston would seem to be an excellent omen. While it is true that business in certain lines in Europe will of course suffer as the result of the war, the fact remains that the majority of those in the motor industry have no direct connection with the production of munitions of war.

The fact that the factories from a standpoint were fully three months behind in July and August in their deliveries of cars for the same months of the previous year is an indication that the business conditions are very serious so far as the industry is concerned.

It is a significant thing that the motor industry, which is perhaps more sensitive to the fact of business conditions than any other line of manufacture, is not showing a panicky spirit. The fact that the men who have to create and build the cars are optimistic is a strong argument that the business conditions will be satisfactory.

Locally the market is in a healthy condition. The dealers report a constant demand for cars, and the figures for the first twelve days of September of this year surpass those for the same period a year ago. The interest in motoring for the coming season is increasing instead of falling off. The interest in the latest word in motor construction and design is very great. Dealers have their showrooms filled with models that are the latest word in motor construction and design. There are very few dealers in Boston who are not pleased with business conditions. It cannot be said that this is satisfactory to enterprising business men is ever satisfied. He is always anxious to do more business than he is transacting, even though he is hitting the high spots in volume of business transacted. His cry is always more. If it were not so he would be a poor business man.

One cannot help but appreciate the increase of sales, but if he did so he would have to mention approximately four-fifths of all the motor cars in the city of Boston. They are all doing business and doing a good business. The increase in registration at the State House, the abundance of new cars on the road in the hands of owners are strong testimony that the motor industry is in a strong, healthy condition at the present time.

In the matter of factory deliveries these are in many instances tardy. The factories as a whole have been somewhat conservative in the turning out of immense quantities, but the demand today from other sections of the country is like that from Boston and vicinity, the result being that the captains of the industry who were in this city last week have no hesitancy in predicting, despite the war conditions, that 1915 will be an excellent season.

Year Shows Good Increase in Business

With the close of August the first fiscal year of the Alden Motor Company came to an end showing a greater volume of business than ever before in the history of the company. [illegible] November there will be a total of [illegible] cars in the hands of owners, which will be a substantial increase over the number of cars in operation at the close of the first year in business. Mr. Logan, the sales manager, has also announced new selling plans and will push as hard as ever, if not harder than ever before.

Motorcycle Party on Three-State Tour

A motorcycle party from [illegible] headed by Howard A. Ingersoll, a long time a director in the Association of American Motorcycle Dealers, one of the best known motorcycle dealers in the East, has just made a successful tour through Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey. The party consisted of Misses Kathryn [illegible], Florence French, Andrew [illegible], Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Schilling, Mr. and Mrs. Hilton and Edith Schilling, Mr. Gallowey and Mrs. J. W. Gallowey.

All Day on Low Gear a Hard Test

On September 24 Franklin dealers throughout the United States and Canada will make a 100-mile demonstration on low gear. It will be a non-stop contest and officially observed and certified to. More than 200 perfect cars, in as many different sections of the country, will make the test. It is a broad commercial method of showing what direct advertising does.

MOTOR SHOW COMMITTEE.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has just announced its committees for the coming year and about the most important activities in the one line is the choice of the great national show. This year the destinies of the show are well in hand in the hands of the members of the Industry Board, headed by Joseph Pope Company. Alfred G. Leland of the Cadillac Company and Harold O. Smith of the Packard Motor Manufacturing Company of Indianapolis.

Employes Interested in Foreign War News

Many Nations Represented In Ford Army of Workmen.

DETROIT, Sept. 12—The fact that the factory is more than 3000 cars behind orders despite daily deliveries offers further striking proof that the Ford Motor Company, like other great purely American institutions is not feeling the effects of the great war, so far as the American market is concerned.

However, war news is being followed with tremendous interest in the huge shops at Highland Park. There are a dozen reasons for this, but the most interesting figures will have to do with the

In the enormous army of Ford employes the Triple Alliance is represented by 668 Germans, 269 Hungarians, 3 Roumanians, 358 Austrians and 32 Bulgars. There are also 61 Turks and six Italians and Sicilians. The Triple Entente, on the other hand, has among the Ford workmen 501 Irish, 123 Scotch, 148 Irish, and 16 Belgians, 5 Australians, 2 Zulus, [illegible] Poles, 34 Lithuanians, 13 Servians, 56 Frenchmen, 21 Swiss, 6 Finns, 56 Hollanders, 3 Japanese and one Servian.

Aside from their heart-interest in the cause of their countrymen and relatives and former homes, these new Americans are in no way interested in the great European struggle. Few or them are obligated to military duty. Practically all of them are more than content to keep the freedom and prosperity and content of the new country of their adoption. Also, they are becoming American citizens very rapidly, these children of troubled faiths in Asiatic Europe-to-live Ford employes are taking out naturalization papers every week in Highland Park.

Predicts Great Touring Season

According to W. H. Schwartz of the Metz Automobile Company, touring in America will receive a great impetus in 1915, many Americans who usually tour abroad will become better acquainted with their own country. This is one result of the war that is demonstrating motoring in Europe," says Mr. Schwartz, "and while the general combat continues the American tourists will have an opportunity of realizing that the United States possesses scenic wonders that will compare favorably with anything to be found abroad. While the average motorist may find difficulty in reaching Yellowstone and visiting the snow clad peaks of Glacier Park, it will be remembered that a little Metz car made the trip across the continent and incidentally won the Glidden trophy in open competition. The opening up of improved roads in various parts of the country will lead to a more systematic chain of highways and a proper participation by the Federal government in accomplishing a work of the greatest value to the nation as a whole."

Establishes a Factory Branch

Announcement is made of the opening of a direct branch in Boston by the Saxon motor car. Boston. The new branch is known as the Saxon Motor Company of Massachusetts, with temporary headquarters at the Chalmers Motor Company branch, No 620 Commonwealth avenue. F. S. Sumner, who has been identified with the automobile [illegible] in Boston and other points in New England for a number of years, has been named to take charge of the Saxon Motor Company of Massachusetts.

"The Saxon business in the New England territory has grown tremendously. For some time it has been apparent to the officials of the Saxon Motor Company that sooner or later the offices in Boston would have to be moved to [illegible]

Among the features of the new Saxon cars, which are numerous in and around Boston, are the addition of running-boards gasoline filler cap in the cowl three [illegible] bonnet, headlights in front, change in color to dark blue and adjustments in the dash

FIRESTONE FINDS BUSINESS GOOD

H. S. Firestone, president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, spent a few hours in this city visiting Tom J. Glenn, the local manager, on Friday last. Mr. Firestone is returning to the factory from a meeting of the big men of the industry recently held at Narragansett Pier and he naturally was in touch with the business situation throughout the country.

Perhaps there is no set of men who have greater opportunities to know just what is being done in the way of motor car production than have the accessory men, and of these the tire men are probably the most conversant with the situation.

Mr. Firestone was confident that the business conditions of the season will be fully the equal of those that have gone before and he gains this impression from actual conditions and not theories.

Manufacturer to Retire from Racing

Convinced that racing has served its purpose in the development of the [illegible] the Henley Manufacturing Company announces its withdrawal, effective September 8, from all future participation in board or dirt track events, except long distance contests which are held on [illegible] speedways.

"The inauguration of this new policy is the result of long deliberation on the present day value of racing to the manufacturer, dealer and rider, and expresses a belief that long distance races, properly conducted, are the best test of machines for the manufacturer, and the best demonstration of quality to the purchaser.

SAFETY FIRST TOUR STARTED

Motor Car Party Is Making Trip Through Country Preaching Gospel.

The "Safety First" campaign being waged by the Safety First Society of New York, of which county Ogden L. Mills is president received additional impetus last Sunday when the "Safety First car started from New York on its tour through Eastern and Middle [illegible] in charge of General [illegible] Frederick H. Elliott. Mr. Elliott, armed with letters of greeting from Mayor John Purroy Mitchel of greater New York to mayors of cities which the car will visit, also letters from Police Commissioner Arthur Woods of Manhattan, Marcus D. Acker, Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson, Chief City Magistrate William McAdoo and others, all of whom are giving their hearty endorsement to the work of the society. The car is equipped with modern safety devices and accessories which tend to make motoring safer. The car will visit Boston in the near future. At first the tour will be through New England and the East, thence to the Middle West and South and later to the Pacific Coast and the Northwest.

Salesmanager Visits Boston

Salesmanager Churchill of the Winton Motor Car Company was another visitor to Boston last week, he making a call on F. A. Hinchcliffe, local manager of the company. In speaking about business matters Mr. Churchill declared there was no reason to expect [illegible] from the present favorable conditions.

"The war has not in any degree affected the amount of business that is being done," said Mr. Churchill. "The Middle West and the Far East are taking more cars than ever and we have no reason to doubt but what the production determined upon by the Winton company will all be taken up by individual purchasers. We have not in any sense reduced our anticipated output for 1915 as the result of hostile activities in Europe."

Lewis "VI." Has Arrived in Boston

Mr. Gilmore of the E. A. Gilmore Company is able to announce the opening of its new salesroom at No. 92 Massachusetts avenue, tomorrow, when the new Lewis "VI." will be shown in Boston for the first time.

This car has every possible refinement of Europe's latest models, and everything that the most exacting owner could desire. Its simplicity of construction, ease in handling, economy of appearance, makes it a car that anyone is proud to drive.

The motor has been built in accordance with the latest improved engineering designs, the superiority of which was demonstrated at the Indianapolis races last May, when the first four cars used motors of this same type.

Mr. Gilmore has thoroughly investigated the car and the responsibility and experience of the men that build it. He has driven the car under all road conditions and has put it to the hardest tests he could devise, and he has never been disappointed.

Some of the many features to consider in the Lewis "VI." are the monobloc motor with its 2½-inch bore and 6-inch stroke; the long wheel base of 135 inches; the large 36x4 wheels equipped with Goodyear tires, safety tread on rear; the Remy electric starting and lighting system; the large roomy body with its six comfortable seats, and the ease with which the car is entered and operated.

Willys Prepares for Active Season

John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland Company, who was in Europe at the outbreak of the war is enthusiastic over the future of America and it might be said unpleasant mistakes, was in Boston during the past week. His stories of the conditions abroad were interesting, but as he said they were now past. The present and future is the time that he is considering and he has but little time in view of his many business activities to recall the incidents of his last European trip. He would not forego them for a good deal, but, as he says, that was three weeks ago and while Europe is fighting America should be working.

While here Mr. Willys visited Messrs. Connell and McKone, his local distributors, and made a thorough inspection of the great Gray & Davis plant on the other side of the Charles River.

WAR PRESENTS BIG OPPORTUNITY

European Conflict Opens Up the Markets Heretofore Closed to American Trade.

"Twenty-five years from now the children of the men who are leaders in business today will be commenting upon the fact that if their fathers had had foresight in 1914 they would have recognized in the present situation the greatest opportunity for business development and actual money making in the history of the world." In these thoughtful and optimistic words, E. S. Jordan, sales manager of Jeffery automobiles, recently reviewed the prospects before American commerce.

"I have on my desk before me," continued Mr. Jordan, "a list of five hundred separate articles ranging in value from $5,000 to $20,000,000, which have in past years been imported exclusively from European countries into the United States. The cessation of these imports opens new markets to American substitutes for all these European articles must be reduced henceforth in America.

"This is the situation of the United States today. Since the war was declared we have received from South America and other countries of the world many inquiries for Jeffery cars. Cars built along the lines of the Jeffery have dominated their markets. France last year sold $5,000,000 worth of cars in South America, Germany $3,000,000, Belgium $1,000,000. England and the United States sold next to nothing. Now the markets of European countries have been closed to South America. A largely increased demand for cars is the result. So it is with products of all classes. Right now you see business on every corner and in every town in the land thinking of all the difficulties that will have to be overcome before this business is open. Think of all the difficulties that had to be overcome before any big project is opened. It's time for the live wire. The difficulties are what raise business interesting. It is what makes us get up in the morning and stay awake all day. That is the fascinating thing about business. It is even not for the few obstacles that make life worth while, we would all quit work."

NOW
Is When You Most Need the Insurance of the Name "Firestone" on Tires and Tubes

You might call Firestone quality a National Tradition. There is one make of a number of commercial articles that stands out like this. Reputation built by word of mouth. Praise won by merit.

And now, with quality rubber scarce and high, and poor rubber plentiful and cheap, more and more car owners will stop experimenting. They will switch to the tires that they know are right.

Firestone
Non-Skid Tires

As Good Rubber as Ever
As Much Rubber as Ever
At Same Price as Ever

And that extra quantity and extra quality of rubber in Firestone Tires are for your economy.

Note the scientific construction of the Firestone Non-Skid Tread.

Extra bulk—more mileage. Extra toughness—more mileage. Built up higher in center where the wear comes—more mileage—not spread on the side for show. Better fabric, better workmen, closer inspection—more mileage. And a Non-Skid Tread that is non-skid, one that really grips, not a mere pattern. This means more safety.

So be fair to yourself. Buy on your better judgment, not price-impulse. Get the tires you know are right. Tell your dealer you must have Firestones.

The Briscoe plant equipment is in every respect equal to that owned by any automobile manufacturing concern. There are no tools nor processes, used by any other concerns, that the BRISCOE COMPANY is not possessed of.

It is supervised by experts who have gone through the entire life of the industry. These men have not only been thoroughly trained in scientific calculation and study of desirable automobile construction, but have as wide personal experience as any set of men in the industry.

MOTOR SHOW TO BE INVITATION EXPOSITION

National Automobile Chamber of Commerce to Limit the Number of Manufacturers' Exhibits.

Because of the number of applications that are far in excess of the available space, the national automobile shows in New York and Chicago, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has voted that the exhibitions in January shall be invitation affairs, to which will be invited such concerns in the motor car and accessory industry as can be cared for properly.

Allotment of space will be confined to members of the N. A. C. C. and subject to the rules of that organization. Members of the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers' Association, the Motor Cycle Manufacturers' Association and the Light Vehicle Manufacturers' Association, and to such other persons and companies as may be formally invited by the management to participate.

The twenty-first annual shows will be held in New York at Grand Central Palace during the week of Jan. 2 in the Coliseum and First Regiment Armory at Chicago, January 23 to 30.

Big Shipment of Crude Rubber

The largest quantity of high grade crude rubber ever received in New York, and then shipped in train loads to any firm, left New York Wednesday, its destination being the factory of The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. at Akron, Ohio. Forty cars were in the train.

It was incidentally, the largest single shipment of this kind ever handled by the B. & O. and passenger motive of the train were made for the occasion by the railway, to commemorate the event.

The Minnehaha sailing from London, whose brought much of this crude rubber to America, carried the largest rubber cargo in the history of the industry.

The series of events marks the working out of the plan that enabled Goodyear to announce over that of last year is the large crops and the generally healthy condition of the country at large due to the conservative business year just passed.

New Briscoe Is in Boston

The new model of the Briscoe car, fully equipped, has been announced. This car is handled in this city by Charles Motor Company, 618 Commonwealth avenue, and wherever their demonstrator is stopped on the street, it attracts no little admiration by its unusually neat appearance. In fact the Briscoe is distinctive for the earnestness of its style, and for its appeal to persons of discriminating taste, who take pride in the ownership of a particularly smart motor car.

"Benjamin Briscoe, one of the foremost American automobile engineers, designed this car at Paris, in collaboration with several well known French and German engineers," says V. A. Charles. "And, besides" continued he, "its inviting artistry of French style, it is even more remarkable for the intrinsic value of its carefully designed mechanical construction and the discrimination exercised in the selection of its materials.

"Large in its capability, light in weight, valorous in performance, and singularly economical in maintenance the Briscoe boasts of numerous features not found in the ordinary small type car—and of many found only on large cars of the highest price.

"Every detail of the Briscoe is planned, designed and built with the idea of simplicity and the elimination of useless weight and mechanism. Intricacies are avoided; ingenuity is all the premium; simplicity is insisted upon. This is not merely good designing; it is good sense. Instead of being a car for an expert to tinker with continuously, the Briscoe is built for the average person—man, woman or child—to run, and to run economically."

Indications Point to Better Business

There are a good many indications that business is in general better now than it was a year ago. On September 1 the H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company reduced the working hours in its factory from ten to nine hours per day, at the same time increasing the rates so the pay of the men remained the same.

The production of automobiles now and as planned for the year, is greater than ever before, and the demand is far exceeding that of last year. This is a visible proof that conditions in the United States are in pretty good shape as Franklin cars are practically all sold in this country.

The reason, in the opinion of the Franklin Company, for the improved business situation over that of last

Becomes Cole Sales Manager

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 12.—One of the big changes in the automobile industry to be announced this week is the announcement by the Cole Motor Car Company that Wilbur Mers (Will) D. Myers comes to that organization from the position of general sales manager with the Stutz Motor Car Company. Mr. Myers took his desk September 1 and at once plunged into a vigorous campaign for the promotion of Cole cars.

Myers' early training in the industry was in riding the road and coming in personal contact with the trade from coast to coast and gulf to lakes. He has gone into the dealer's place of business, removed his coat and plunged into their problems with them.

European Trade Suffers Great Slump

In a letter to F. B. Stearns, president of the F. B. Stearns Company, written from Coventry, England, on August 26, Charles Y. Knight, inventor of the Knight motor, says:

"As you probably know, everything over here in the motor line is dead on the deadest of mackerels. The only customer the Daimler Company has is the government. The plant is working full force on trucks and twenty-horsepower chassis, all with the Knight type motor, of course, as the Daimler Company uses nothing else. They are fitted with rough wood bodies painted khaki color. They have sold the government about 130 cars all told in two weeks.

"On the Continent all the forces from the plants are at the front. Minerva, Mercedes and Panhard are all shut down, and I suppose by the time you get this half their men will have been put out of business in the battle which is just opening up.

"But Europe's misfortune is certain to be America's gain. There will be no motor progress over here for at least two years, and very little then.

Divided Front Seats the Latest Style

The latest and what is said to be a very practical convenience in automobile design is the divided front seats. That other makers will follow the example set by many makers is taken as a matter of course, because of the added style, comfort and convenience afforded.

The new National Six has one model, the six-passenger car, with these divided front seats allowing ample aisle way between them for passengers to go from front to rear without getting out of the car. It has the additional advantages of permitting the two front seats to be quivalent to arm chairs. In the pacious tonneau of this same car re two extra arm chairs, these can e folded completely out of sight, by imply lowering them automatically nto compartments concealed in the ear of the two front seats.

reat Interest Is Being Displayed

Since the announcement was made st C. R. Henshaw will handle the dge in Boston he has been overwhelmed by inquiries from would-be s in Eastern Massachusetts, who s anxious to become affiliated with e local representative of the famous motor parts makers of Detroit. "Telephone calls, telegrams and letrs have poured in almost incessantly from those in the trade, while dividuals have besieged me with rsonal appeals for literature or inrmation, which would not be so remarkable," Mr. Henshaw said, "were not for the fact that these persons not know any more about the car an I do. Dodge Brothers are keeping the details absolutely secret."

THREE TRIPLE PLAYS.

In a recent inter-department baseball game, played between employes of the Studebaker Corporation's Detroit plants, Infielder Olin Moehs of the tool designing department made three unassisted triple plays—a performance believed to be a world's record.

MOTOR TRUCKS FOR ARMY USES

Subsidized Motor Vehicles Proving Valuable In European Warfare.

Interesting light is thrown on the methods adopted by the French and German governments to subsidize motor trucks for military uses, by John W. Willys president of the Willys-Overland Company and head of the Garford and Willys-Utility trucks. Mr. Willys has just returned from London, England, where he remained several weeks after leaving the continent shortly before the actual opening of hostilities.

"The war lords of Europe early foresaw the superiority of the motor truck over horse-drawn vehicles as a means of transportation," says Mr. Willys. "This statement is verified by the precautions they took to reserve the right to use large batteries of heavy duty vehicles purchased for commercial use by private individuals or corporations. They realized that in case of war the manufacturers of automobiles on their side of the Atlantic would be at a standstill. Consequently they adopted measures to assure themselves of the proper motor equipment even under such circumstances. These considerations led to the tender of subsidies of such material importance as to encourage the purchase of motor trucks by private concerns under conditions which would enable the government at any time to draft them for army purposes with the certainty that in the meanwhile they would be kept in perfect running condition and provided with a properly trained personnel.

"The subvention for a single truck amounts to the sum of $1,190, payable as follows: A premium of $428 on purchase, followed by four annual premiums of $190.50 for the period of each vehicle. If a four-or five-ton trailer is provided for the truck the original premium is raised to $714 with annual payments of $285 each.

"France has adopted much the same method as that of Germany but the bonus premiums in that country are left entirely with the understanding that they are to revert to the government for immediate use in case of war.

"Each year these trucks are subjected to the military authorities by various owners and an examination is made to determine whether or not they fulfill all of the strict requirements. A truck must be constructed entirely in France in a factory where at least three-fifths of the workmen are French. It must be in every respect up to the French standard in construction and power, the requirements being laid down by the French military experts. Upon complying with these conditions the truck owner receives a bounty amounting from $1,022 to $1,190.

"In spite of these precautions, which have been carried on almost since the inception of the motor truck industry an alarming shortage of transportation facilities has been found by the tremendous armies now in the field. Although the levies on motor trucks have been followed by levies on horses, many more trucks are still needed."

ADMITTED TO N. A. C.

The Chevrolet Motor Company of Flint, Mich., has been admitted to membership in the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. The N. A. C. C. now includes ninety two leading motor car manufacturers.

MAKERS LOOK FOR GREAT TRADE

Aggressive Campaign for World's Markets Is Certain With the Return of Confidence.

Reports from factories throughout the country indicate a return of trade to automobiles which, like other industries, stopped short with the declarations of war in Europe, but which, according to reports received by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, consisting of ninety-two of the leading car makers, should be fully equal to the same period of last year.

Recent car movements reported to the traffic department of the N. A. C. C. for August are even better than for last year, Alvan Reeves Reeves, manager of the chamber, "although most of the shipping took place during the last half of the month, the first two weeks showing many cancellations of shipments and business was almost at a standstill. With the passing of the fright, however, came the dealers to correspond. Some factories state that they are now asking for special shipping dates after the month of August has passed, as against 4,469 cars for a month last year—a very substantial increase.

"It is the general feeling among the makers that the war should help the automobile business considerably, especially after the first month's panic has passed. Even the most conservative builders appreciate that this country has a rare opportunity to secure the trade of the world, in which they have not been the leaders, although first in the pinnacle.

"The American automobile manufacturers are making plans for aggressive export campaigns, while the American trade during the next twelve months should be the equal, if not greater, than any year in America's history."

Owns Tragedy Jewel of the Hapsburgs

Prince Ferdinand Gave It to Fannie Ward

A diamond studded watch, today one of the most interesting bits of jewelry in the world, set so mixed up in the world tragedy that is now being enacted in Europe, so steeped in tragedy, so intricately associated with assassination and violent death as to make ownership uncanny, is in this city. It is the property of Fannie Ward, the actress, and it came to her from the hand of the man whose death has been the direct and moving cause of plunging eight nations into the most awful war in the history of the world.

Every happening who has handled this jewel, passed it through assassination or in the case of one of the princes, it is still an open question of whether he died by his own hand or was the victim of a bullet, has had or later took his life and so deprived Franz Joseph of Austria of a direct successor to the Austrian throne.

Crown Prince Rudolph the Empress Elizabeth and with a few months Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his morganatic wife possessed that jewel and all of them met violent deaths. Its ownership is a prize-winning feature of Austrian history.

It remains to be seen whether the stranger fact that it is now in the possession of a woman with the Hapsburgs is broken. Miss Ward believes so, and it has been treated by every Austrian owner as a talisman. Its possession or the expressed wish for possession of it has brought many a foe down in the dust, and has departed from it forever.

It was while she was starring in "In the Bishop's Carriage" in London that she made the acquaintance of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand and then heir apparent to the throne of Austria-Hungary. Hungry records the fact that he fell heir to the place without not without a few years later was to die from every Austrian subject, and Miss Ward had an unforgotten [illegible] and a few weeks later she received a package from Vienna containing the jewelled watch and at the same time a letter from Doultremont's handsome [illegible] from the Archduke and his bride, now

With the package from Vienna came a note from the Archduke assuring her of the pleasure he derived from presenting her performance and asking her acceptance of the watch of remembrance he was sending to her.

"I am not in the least afraid," says Miss Ward. "I am quite convinced that if there is any fatality attached to the thing it is only for the unfortunate Hapsburgs, but in the light of events that have followed my ownership of it and those [illegible] that preceded it, I admit that I am a bit startled even now."

Gilmore Offers A $1600 CAR Worth the Money

Mr. E. A. Gilmore has just returned from an inspection trip of several weeks' duration, during which time he investigated all of the 1915 model automobiles that he considered worth investigating. As the result, he returns to Boston with much satisfaction, bringing with him what he considers to be the greatest value in automobiles that has ever been offered in this country, and takes pleasure in announcing to his many friends and customers that he is now the Boston and Eastern Massachusetts representative of the L. P. C. Motor Company, Racine, Wis., manufacturers of the

LEWIS "VI"

Monarch of the Sixes

Mr. Gilmore's decision was reached after driving this wonderful car hundreds of miles over Wisconsin roads and thoroughly investigating every feature of its construction. The car is a six passenger, six cylinder beauty; 40 H. P. Its power and flexibility are wonderful. Its riding qualities are unequalled with its 135-inch wheel base and 36x4 inch wheels with Goodyear Tires, safety tread on rear. There is no question that the Lewis VI. is a year in advance of every six on the American market. Its design is a replica of Europe's latest models, and its motor is the same type that won the first four prizes at Indianapolis this year.

Mr. Gilmore invites you to call for a demonstration; not merely a ride out over the boulevards, but a real demonstration over any hill or road you choose to travel.

He believes that he is offering you a car for $1600 that is worth the money; a car that is so far in advance of anything else on the market that if you ride in a Lewis VI. you are almost sure to buy one.

Mr. Gilmore's commendation, based on the judgment gained by twelve years' selling experience in Boston, should induce your inspection of the Lewis VI. before purchasing any other make of car.

The Best Tire Built is Not a War Price Tire

Goodyear Prices Same as in June

Bear in mind in these extra-price days that Goodyear tires—No-Rim-Cut tires—sell at old-time prices.

To pay more is a needless tax. You know—or should know—that Goodyears are the best tires built. They outsell any other. They excel all others in four great ways—

In the No-Rim-Cut feature
In the saving of blow-outs
In combating loose treads
In the All-Weather tread

These are exclusive features. In these ways—at least—any price you pay buys you a lesser tire.

1,500,000 Pounds of Extra-Grade Rubber

We have secured abroad—by having men on the ground—1,500,000 pounds of extra-grade rubber. It was practically all the good rubber available. And we paid the before-war prices.

Ships are bringing this rubber now. Much of it has already arrived here.

We bought most of the good rubber. Prices of "Off-Color" have advanced. So the Goodyear factory and the Goodyear users are in a unique position.

No Under-Grades

We pledge you the same grade of rubber as always. Our formulas have not been changed. Never will Goodyear tires be lowered in grade, no matter what rubber costs.

Today our prices are the same as in June. Practically every standard tire today sells for more than Goodyears. Some sell immensely higher.

Don't pay those extra prices. Don't run the risk of under-grade rubber.

There were always reasons for buying Goodyear tires, resistless to men who knew them. Today there are new reasons—compelling reasons—due to this fortunate purchase of rubber.

Get the full benefit. Your dealer will sell you Goodyear tires—built as we always built them—at the prices he charged in June.

"Such talk is nonsense. It has rarely been made with a purpose. I am one of the most sincere admirers of the Governor. I have talked him at close range. No Lieutenant-Governor in history has spent so much time at the State House as I have, or given so much of his time to the duties of a really important position.

"I know Governor Walsh to be a clean, sincere, high-minded American, free of deceit, free of guile, free from control.

"It is true that the Governor and I have not always been in full accord on matters of party policy. One of the Governor's pet ideas, that a State commission should be composed of members of all the parties, is one with which I am not in full personal accord. The Governor can justify his position as I feel that I can mine.

"On these questions, however, whenever we have differed we have differed as the best of friends. There is nothing I would not do to advance the interests of [illegible] Walsh. There is nothing that I would not do for me that he would leave undone.

Germs Live Long in Ice, Says Tech Man

Bacteriological Expert Disproves Old Theory by Experiments.

Contrary to general belief, freezing food in your ice box does not kill the food germs. Instead, the germs thrive and have promise of a long life under such conditions.

This astonishing disclosure has just been ascertained by Professor Simeon C. Keith, jr., of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology bacteriological department and Boston's most famous germ expert. At his laboratory at No. 88 Broad street, Professor Keith has probably the biggest collection of tame germs on record. Professor Keith figuratively can make a germ lie down, roll over, and jump through a hoop.

Just at present and for the past six months he has had a collection of germs "held in suspension" at two of Boston's largest food storage plants in substantiation of his startling assertion that freezing food does not kill germs, but instead makes them longer lived. In ice cream, for instance, Professor Keith proves with facts, figures and experimental data that germs retain life best when the cream is frozen most solidly.

His two boys, Joseph, sixteen, and Leo, nine, will be arraigned in the Juvenile court. The police say that the father took the boys into St. Paul's Cathedral, where a poor box was robbed.

PLAN TO TAKE SCHOOL STRIKE TO THE COURTS

Brockton Parents Ready for New Move if Teacher Is Exonerated by Committee.

BROCKTON, Sept. 12.—If the School Board's hearing Tuesday night on the charges against Miss Clara J. Wetherell, principal of the Hancock School, does not result in the dismissal of Miss Wetherell, the parents who accuse Miss Wetherell will take the matter forthwith into court.

That is the threat of R. H. Skillings, chairman of the Parents' Committee. The school fight, which opened when over twenty pupils in the school, with their parents' support, "struck" and refused to attend classes, has set all Brockton by the ears, and if the parents take the matter into court it is not unlikely that some of the parents may be taken to court on charges of inducing children to stay away from school.

Brockton is taking sides in the fight. Miss Wetherell and the School Board are not without staunch supporters. Many of Miss Wetherell's pupils brought bouquets in token of their loyalty, and graduates of the school will appear at Tuesday's hearing to testify in her behalf.

Up to today all parties have inclined to keep silence in the whole matter but today Mr Skillings, who is the father of fifteen children, and whose own children are among the strikers, discussed the situation. He said:

"We wanted an open hearing, when not only we who signed the petition for Miss Wetherell's removal might be heard, but when other parents who have knowledge of the facts might appear. We are amply able to [illegible] all our claims, but in getting signers to our petition we confined ourselves to people with children in the school.

"We will attend the meeting of course, but if our petition is subcontracted and if the matter is not met in a satisfactory manner, we shall take it into court without hesitation. The school board says the charges are not sufficiently serious to warrant action against Miss Wetherell. But Superintendent of Schools Farley told Mr G. A. Morse and myself that he had said to Miss Wetherell, 'Unless are very serious charges.' He said he asked her if she had used a certain vulgar expression, and that she replied, after some hesitation, 'I do not remember having done so.'

"If she had not been in the habit of using such language, she would have indignantly denied the charge.

"We have been accused of venting spite for fancied wrongs upon Miss Wetherell. This is ridiculous. Not one many of us would by any possibilities unite in mean spite work.

"Miss Wetherell, on the other hand, because she could not get [illegible] my wife cried herself for what she thought was a slight, took it out on our daughter who was refused promotion, though her marks were practically the same as another girl who was promoted.

"We are not at all pleased with the apparent indifference of the school board in the whole matter. Considering that thirty-nine out of fifty parents signed our petition, we deserve respect."

TAFT'S SON TO WED Marta Bowers Sets Oct. 17 WHITE HOUSE ROMANCE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12. — The climax of the boy and girl romance which has been interesting official Washington during the past two administrations was announced today when it was stated that the marriage of Robert Taft, son of the former President, and Mrs. Taft and Miss Marta Bowers, daughter of the former Solicitor General and Mrs. Lloyd Bowers, will take place on October 17.

The wedding will be attended by the most representative official gathering Washington has seen outside of the White House functions.

Robert Taft, now established in law practice in Cincinnati, and Miss Bowers, have been engaged for nearly four years, and their courtship covered a corresponding period before that. The wedding was delayed, it is stated, because of a decree of Mrs. Bowers that it was not to take place until young Mr. Taft was safely established in business.

JAIL FOR TIPSY AUTO DRIVERS URGED BY JUDGE

Judge Arthur P. Stone of the Cambridge Court last night urged jail sentences for men who drive autos while under the influence of liquor.

The judge's statement followed his sentencing earlier in the day of Frank J. Hilliard, a salesman, to three months in the House of Correction on a charge of operating a motor car while under the influence of liquor. Hilliard was accused by the police of striking a Cambridge man with his car on Lafayette street, Cambridge, on the night of August 27. He appealed and was held in $300 for the Superior Court.

"A man who runs an automobile while under the influence of liquor should be sent to jail," said Judge Stone. "There is no use against a man's using liquor, neither is there a law against his running an automobile; but the man who does both should be sent to jail.

"If you want people to understand this, the jail sentence must be applied. The offence merits it."

Judge Avery of the Quincy Court said last night that he believed jail sentences should be given men who operate while intoxicated. He said the court, however, always had to take into account the varying circumstances of different cases.

COULTHURST ON NEW CONTRACT FOR LIGHTING

Says the Edison Company at Last Shows Some Desire to Meet the City's Terms; 10-Year Clause.

"The new proposed electric lighting contract contains a number of important concessions, but apart from that its chief significance is that the Edison Electric Company has come down from its perch of 'take it or leave it' and shows its anxiety to come down into line with the city," said Councilman John A. Coulthurst yesterday. "The new contract also shows the good judgment of the Council in refusing to accept the previous one. The really important concession made by the new contract is the clause providing that the Gas and Electric Light Commission shall fix a price for the arc lamps not in excess of $87.50, which was the price fixed in the contract. In other words, the price shall not exceed $87.53, but may be as much lower as the commissioners consider fair and reasonable.

"Under the contract publication must be made to the commission within ten days of signing the contract so that the matter may be determined immediately. There are others of substantial value to the city, but as they are of a technical nature I shall not refer to them in detail.

"The principal objections to the contract in my mind, are twofold. It is the same as the first one, a ten-year contract, and it does not contain the clause of the previous one. The ten-year objection can be obviated, in my judgment, if in place of the arbitration clause, which provides for three arbitrators, one chosen by the city, one by the company and the third by the two, there is substituted a reference to the Gas and Electric Light Commission once in two and a half years or three years.

"The objections to a ten-year term then would be entirely obviated, because thereby the commission would determine three times during the life of the contract what was a fair price and thereby the consumer the entire benefit of any reduced costs, which is as it should be.

"In regard to the labor clause, the changes as suggested by the Central Labor Union and by the Electrical Workers' Union were reasonable and just, but it should be the general policy of the city of Boston in the issuing of all contracts of public service to see to it that fair and reasonable provisions are made for the employment of labor.

"There should be no difference made between the Edison Electric Illuminating Company and a contracting company competing in sharp competition for public work. I have not been able to make an examination of the new contract as yet. I have merely had time to glance over it for information from me the principal suggestions that I have to make."

Refuses to Pay Fine or Give Girl Ring

Youth Was Accused of Stealing Gem From Sweetheart.

"She sang in the movies when I met her," said Joseph Goldberg of Chelsea when Judge Riley questioned him in the Malden Court. Goldberg was charged with the larceny of a diamond ring from his former sweetheart, Rose Goldman of Malden.

"I asked her to marry me," said Goldberg. "She consented, and I told her she must give up the movies. She promised. I gave her the engagement ring. And then one night I discovered she was singing again in the movies. * * * I did not snatch the ring from her finger."

Judge Riley ruled: "I don't think you had criminal intent, and I shall fine you $200 unless you care to give her back the ring."

"I'll neither pay the fine nor surrender the ring," declared Goldberg yesterday.

Dr. Parsons Tells of Experiences in Munich and Berlin.

Dr. F. P. Parsons, of No. 352 Adams street, Dorchester, his wife and son, arrived home yesterday after a strenuous trip through Italy and Germany, by way of London.

"When the war broke out I was in Italy," said Dr. Parsons. "I went with my family to Munich and later to Berlin. We could use no American money. For three weeks I worked at the American embassy and helped take care of more than 12,000 stranded Americans. Every American in Berlin wore an American flag on his coat for protection. I was nearly mobbed one night by a party of Germans who mistook the flag I was wearing for a British one."

The revised bill probably will be offered as a substitute for the measure now before the Senate. The $200,000 [illegible] for the rebuilding of Boston Harbor is among those stricken out.

WAR A BLESSING IN DISGUISE, BEN GIBBY SAYS

Erstwhile Lobbyist Supports the White Socks Boom; He Calls Them Boon to Mankind.

Mr. Ben Gibby, well known to one and all, rises to express the opinion that, in one respect, this here war will turn out to be a blessing in disguise.

Mr. Gibby lives at the Hotel Bellevue, in Beacon street. He lives well. He also dresses well. Eight or ten years ago he was sometimes called the "King of the Lobby." In those days he made a business of accelerating legislation. For six years he hasn't stepped a foot inside the State House.

"You say," said an interviewer, "that the war may be a blessing in disguise?"

Benjamin Franklin Gibby flicked the ash from the fag end of a Romeo et Juliette.

"I do," he said.

"Explain yourself."

"It will drive the men of the United States, young and old men, to wearing white socks!

"I observe that the editor of the AMERICAN urges white socks for Americans and says we can thus get along without the dyes heretofore imported from Germany. Your editor thinks it will be a good plan to spend America's money at home, and get along without these German dyes.

"This gratifies me very much; I have not always been in complete accord with the AMERICAN'S editorial page.

"I began preaching white sox for men more than ten years ago. Up to that time I had had more or less trouble with my feet. I haven't had a moment's trouble since I shifted from black to pure white socks. I bought white socks for all the bellboys at the Adams House [illegible] induced porters here at the Bellevue to try them.

"Everybody makes the same report, that his foot troubles disappear or tremendously decrease the minute he abandons colored socks."

URGES MUSIC IN THEATRES TO HALT PANICS

Ex-Fireman in Letter to Mayor Would Make Orchestra Compulsory in Every Playhouse.

The following interesting letter was recently sent to Mayor Curley, who has taken the matter under advisement

Hon. James M Curley,
Mayor of Boston
Dear S:

I take this means of approaching you in regard to a subject which is of vital importance to the public, and one in which I know you are deeply interested. Scarcely a day goes by but what we read in the daily papers of fire panics and terrible catastrophies which are constantly occurring in theatres and places of amusement, resulting in injury and death to many people. How to guard against future [illegible]

[illegible] horrors are [illegible] being discussed in every household. The horrors of the Arcadia lodging house fire are still fresh in the minds of the public and have served as a terrible example of the non-enforcement of our fire-protection laws, which are not mandatory through a penalty.

Resolutions relative to the enforcement of laws safeguarding life against fire and panics caused by the fear of fire when none exists have been adopted by labor organizations all over the State and have inspired the drafting of several bills [illegible]

[illegible] the State Legislature.

"PROPERTY FIRST."

At a hearing at the State House on Senate bill No. 313, the speakers with one or two exceptions seemed to dwell upon the protection of property as the all important, and protection of life appeared to be of secondary consideration.

Now, Mr. Mayor, I know you will agree with me that life and limb should be the first to be considered, and that every precaution should be taken, and that every good idea or device for the safety of life should be adopted when found practicable.

In my connection with the fire service for a great many years I have had an opportunity to observe what a simple little thing will create an audience in a theatre to become panic-stricken, often with serious results. Only last Spring at a prominent theatre in Boston a very serious panic was started by a rat in the upper balcony, which was seen by a woman, who began to scream. The audience who thought it was a fire rose en masse and rushed for the doors. The orchestra immediately started playing, which brought the crowd back to their seats but it was over twenty minutes before the audience was quieted so that the performance could proceed. I could mention incidents of the above nature, which have occurred in one of the fire houses in Boston, and in every case the audience was brought back to normal by the effect of the music, and the sight of the musicians playing, which inspired confidence in the people, and made them feel that there was no cause for alarm.

I have been told by musicians that it is an unwritten law for them to immediately start playing at the first signs of excitement or fire, and that they are at all times prepared with a piece of music, memorized, to play in the event of an emergency. The brave musicians who went down with the Titanic were only observing this unwritten law.

ORCHESTRA NECESSARY.

Mr. Mayor, I believe that an orchestra of musicians is a necessity, and should be compulsory for the protection of the public in case of panic. I was present at a theatre here in Boston at a performance where they used a cathedral gong to announce the close of the act, and the effect what happen in that theatre if some one shouted "Fire!" and this gong were sounded in every part of the house? Could there be anything more out of place?

I have witnessed the efforts of employes and actors calling on people to sit down, and the sound of danger, which only seemed to increase the alarm and arouse more excitement, but at the first sound of music the effect was like magic in quieting the audience.

The managers of theatres should be compelled to use every precaution for the protection of their patrons. It matters little if it takes a year or two longer to make them fireproof, but it matters a great deal if the lives of our wives and children are jeopardized by their false ideas of economy.

Musicless theatres should not be allowed to exist in Boston, and it depends upon our public spirited Mayor to refuse a license for such, unless they employ an orchestra of musicians, for the reasons I have stated.

Some of our best theatres do not advertise with their attractions that they use an orchestra during panics.

May I hope that you will give this communication your immediate attention and advice.

Yours respectfully,
WILLIAM J. HODGE,
Retired Fireman.

[illegible] holders of the Associated Trust [illegible] of a receiver [illegible] meeting the latter part of the [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] to protect their [illegible].

[illegible] that the total value of [illegible] which the Associated Trust [illegible] apartment and hotel property [illegible] through [illegible] to pay $200,000 [illegible] affairs of the [illegible] will be all that is [illegible] certificate [illegible] the trust an aggregate sum of $982,590.

The total liabilities of the trust, according to the report of Receiver Noble, amount to $1,238,051 89. There are assets, excluding the Lenox Hotel property, on which a special report will be submitted later, of $1[illegible] [illegible] were estimated [illegible] the real estate held by the trust.

[illegible] the report of Receiver Noble the [illegible] management of the Associated Trust by Fred E. Blanchard, former trustee, was severely scored. His management was characterized as "lavish, wasteful and extravagant."

MORTGAGES TOO LARGE.

The receiver also pointed out that [illegible] the affairs of the trust were to be [illegible] specified that the total mortgage indebtedness was not to exceed 60 per cent. of the fair market value of the trust property, but that under Blanchard's management the mortgages assumed or executed by him aggregated far in excess of 60 per cent.

The declaration of trust was filed January 2, 1905. It was prepared and signed by Blanchard. It was so drawn as to place absolutely in his hands without possibility of interference either by the officers, directors or holders of certificates—the property of the company and the hundreds of thousands of dollars placed in the coffers of the company by the certificate holders.

The declaration of trust expressly stipulates that the trustee may appoint any person, whether a certificate holder or not, as an officer or director of the company, and that he may dismiss any director by a simple notice to that effect. It also grants him power to name his own salary and that of the other officials. Here are some of the powers conferred by the declaration upon the trustee:

To buy property as he sees fit, "whether the same shall consist of real or personal property, at such times and on such terms as to him may seem advisable—all without the consent, written or oral, of certificate holders, or of the board of directors.

To sell, barter, or exchange.

To make repairs, issue leases, discharge or contract mortgages.

To fix a reasonable compensation for his own services as organizer, as well as to fix a reasonable compensation for his personal services as a trustee.

To pay himself for said services.

PROTECTION FOR TRUSTEE.

Here are some other significant phrases in the declaration of trust protecting the personal property of the trustee and preventing his dismissal:

No person or corporation can touch personal property of the trustee for claims against the Associated Trust.

He shall not be required to give a bond.

The trustee cannot be ousted by either board of directors or by certificate holders.

The trust controls forty-one properties, including the Hotel Lenox, Hotel Buckminster and Hotel Coolidge, together with many apartment properties and apartment hotels in Brookline and the Back Bay. All this property, however, is subject to heavy mortgages.

Certificates of the company have been widely advertised in newspapers, street cars and booklets issued by the company.

The Associated Trust several months ago took possession of an elaborate suite of offices, occupying an entire floor in the building at No. 14 Federal street, running through to No. 113 Congress street.

BUYS NEW HOUSE.

Robert T. Fowler has sold the single family bungalow at No. 60 Sturgis road, West Roxbury. The purchaser is Arthur W. DeGoosh. The property is not yet assessed. The purchaser price was in the neighborhood of $6,000.

Robert Tat[illegible]le has purchased the Henry Allen estate on Main street, near Whitehall lake, Woodville, comprising three acres of land, and an eight room dwelling. The Edward T. Harrington Company were the brokers.

Opening of Subway to Quicken Renting of Allston Suites

Boylston Subway Opening to Take Place Within Two Weeks.

Added impetus to the renting of apartments along Commonwealth avenue, Allston, in Brookline, Brighton and the Newtons is expected to result from the opening of the new Boylston street subway, which will take place within two weeks.

[illegible] there [illegible] when the cars are [illegible] through the new tube will [illegible] real estate men an increased demand not only for apartments but for one and two-family dwellings.

The Boylston street subway will meet a pressing need. At Park street during the rush hours there is a bulk of traffic equalled at but few points in Boston.

The new subway is somewhat different in appearance from its predecessors [illegible] roof [illegible] gives it the appearance of a long corridor. Through much of its length it is built in two single "barrels," separated by a wall through which openings large enough for a man to pass are cut at intervals. Through the remainder of the distance it is in a single large "barrel" with the same flat roof.

The track throughout is rock-ballasted. Each of the stations "Copley" and "Massachusetts" has two platforms, opposite, out on the outside of the tracks. The idea of having an individual color scheme in the trimmings of each station has been followed out in this case as originated in the Washington street tunnel. In the "Copley" station the mosaic trimmings are in blue, while in the "Massachusetts" station they are in maroon. Each of the stations is over [illegible] feet long. The Copley station has two passageways to Dartmouth street from its westbound platform and one large passageway from the eastbound platform, coming out on Boylston street by the Public Library.

At the "Massachusetts" station there will be a lobby on Massachusetts avenue reaching [illegible] platforms by passageways, and a similar passageway to both platforms from Boylston street.

ACTON ESTATE SOLD.

The sale is reported of the Deacon Albert Hayward farm in West Acton, on the road leading from South Acton to Boxborough. The estate comprises 100 acres of land, a ten-room dwelling and farm buildings. The grantor was Frederick E. Bailey, the purchaser being Thomas W. Cole. The Edward T. Harrington Company were the brokers.

ACTIVITY HOLDS UP IN BUILDING IN FACE OF WAR

Statistics of Building Department Show 5 Per Cent. Increase Over Last Year.

Building operations in Boston during the month of August showed no diminution of activity, notwithstanding the [illegible] money market and general financial depression resulting from the European war.

[illegible] of the building department [illegible] building permits [illegible] taken out last month than in [illegible] month a year ago. One [illegible] and thirty-three was the [illegible] permits issued last month [illegible] for the month of August [illegible] is an increase of almost [illegible] per cent.

The number of permits issued for first and second-class structures (brick) was considerably in excess of the figures of a year ago. Permits for frame buildings suffered a [illegible] due to the operation of the [illegible] fire limits, within which only [illegible] structures may be erected.

According to the records of the building department the number of permits issued in August for the construction of brick buildings was forty-nine, against thirty three issued a year ago. Only eighty-four permits for wooden structures were issued, compared to ninety-four authorized in 1913.

Of the forty-nine permits issued for brick structures, thirteen were taken out by builders engaged in putting up property in Ward 25, which takes in Brighton and Allston. [illegible] of these are for apartment [illegible], ranging from three to five-[illegible] structures and housing from [illegible] to a score of families each.

Eleven permits were issued for garages or automobile storehouses.

Twenty-four of the eighty-four permits for wooden structures were for dwellings to be erected in Ward 24, Dorchester, most of which were for "three-flatters."

The fact that building operations have suffered no decrease since the outbreak of the war is a high tribute to the intrinsic worth of Boston property, and indicates the confidence which builders and investors have in the local real estate situation.

Building activity for the entire year has been slightly in excess of that a year ago. During the first eight months 1,209 permits were issued for all classes of construction, against 1,147 during the corresponding period a year ago, an increase of sixty-two permits. This is a gain of about five per cent.

Activity this year, however, is considerably less than that in 1912 which was the most active period in the history of the Boston Building Department. In 1912, from January 1 to September 1, 1,469 permits were issued, 260 permits more than the present year.

That the next few months will show a slight letting up in building activity is expected in view of the ever-growing tendency of the money market to tighten. The aggregate of building operations, however, is not expected to fall below last year's level, when similar financial conditions, from a different cause, prevailed.

Building Activity Leads Last Year

New England Building During Past Week Shows Drop.

While building operations in New England during the past week showed a considerable falling off, the total aggregate of contracts awarded from January 1 to September 9 is greater by over a million dollars than that for the corresponding period a year ago.

According to statistics of building and engineering operations compiled by the F. W. Dodge Company, the total amount of contracts awarded this year was $122,244,000, against $121,058,000, which are the 1913 figures.

During 1912, which was the most active building year in New England on record, the total amount of contracts awarded was $138,734,000.

D. G.—You misunderstand the purpose and method of co-operative banks. Co-operative banks do not sell houses. There is no co-operative bank plan of purchasing a home.

What the co-operative bank will do is to advance money with which to build a home, provided the prospective builder owns the lot outright and has already constructed the foundations. The maximum amount that a co-operative bank is permitted by statute to loan is 80 per cent. of the total valuation.

By mail we are sending you the names of several co-operative bank officials, any one of whom will gladly explain to you in detail the method of procuring a co-operative bank loan.

Mrs. W. G.—No. 13 Everett street does not appear on the Atlas. No. 11 is assessed for $8,100, of which $4,400 is on the 5,787 square feet of land. The assessment on No. 15 is $7,300. There are 7,097 square feet of land taxed for $3,500. You undoubtedly refer to one or the other of these two properties.

C—491—The concern about which you inquire has been engaged in the development of tracts of land for a number of years, and is generally regarded as reliable.

M—573—The property of the late Edward Anthony is assessed for $3,000. The assessment has increased about $2,000 during the last two years. It has an excellent location, especially for a Summer residence. The property may be considered isolated, in that it is not contiguous to a car line.

B. E. B.—Land on the street about which you inquire is rated by the assessors at about $2 a square foot. Other lots range in value from [illegible] to $2.75 per square foot. There has been some building activity, but it has been chiefly confined to the renovation of old structures. Indications point to a slow increase in the valuation of property on the street.

Active Demand for Lots in Cambridge

Continued demand for lots at University Park, Cambridge, is reported by Joseph H. Allen and Otto M. Frank, trustees, who are developing the property. There are over 200 lots on the tract, more than half of which have been sold. The property is bounded by Concord avenue, Bay State road, and Field and Garden streets. The property is only four minutes from Harvard square. Streets have been graded and accepted. Water, gas and electric lights have been installed.

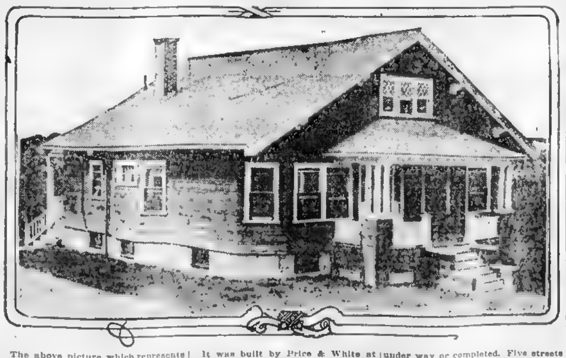
Report Sale of Many Lots in Waverly

Considerable activity during the past week at Waverly Oaks terrace, Waverly, was reported by J. W. Wilbur, who has the property under development. On Labor Day forty-two lots were sold. The development at Waverly has been carefully laid out. Streets are being built to grades approved and accepted by the city of Waltham.

$3,500 BUNGALOW ON DORCHESTER TRACT



The above picture, which represents one of a number of dwellings built on a tract of land under development by Franklin I. Smith in Dorchester, illustrates what may be done with $3,500.

It was built by Price & White at No. 25 Tiverton road for Edward S. Pine. The structure contains six rooms, all on the first floor.

The tract is bounded by Morton and West Selden streets and contains 247 lots. Several other dwellings are under way or completed. Five streets have been cut through the property—Glenhill road, Owen and Marie streets, Loran road, Lena terrace and Lanark [illegible] and water pipes and electric mains have already been installed.

SURE WAY TO GET RID OF BLACKHEADS

There is one simple, safe and sure way that never fails to get rid of blackheads and that is to dissolve them.

To do this get about two ounces of plain powdered neroxin from any drug store—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet sponge—rub over the blackheads briskly—wash the parts and you will be surprised how the blackheads have disappeared. Big blackheads, little blackheads, no matter where they are, simply dissolve and disappear, leaving the parts without any mark whatever. Blackheads are simply a mixture of dust and dirt and secretions from the body that form in the pores of the skin—pinching and squeezing only cause irritation, make large pores, and do not get them out after they become hard. The powdered neroxin and the water simply dissolve the blackheads so they wash right out, leaving the pores free and clean and in their natural condition. Any body troubled with these unsightly blemishes should certainly try this simple method.

Slaters Bring Rare Pets

Companions in War Perils

A white baboon with pink eyes and an African lemur with bat-ears and a ferret-nose have come to Boston simultaneously with the arrival from abroad of Mrs. Mabel Hunt [illegible] Beacon street and Readville [illegible] daughters, the Misses Esther [illegible] Slater.

The baboon, which has been [illegible] "Piggie," will this week be [illegible] ferred from his present [illegible] quarters at Readville to the [illegible] Franklin Park. But "Peanut," the [illegible] little half squirrel, half ape [illegible] been adopted by Miss Ray Slater as her [illegible] pet. Miss Slater kept "Peanut" with her while stopping this week at the Touraine.

Mrs. Slater, who, with her two daughters arrived last week from London after escaping from the French war zone, received "Piggie," the baboon, in a box from Africa [illegible] at Deauville, France. The [illegible] was shipped across the [illegible] transferred to a luxurious [illegible] the Slater Readville garage before Mrs. Slater arrived on the [illegible]

LEARNED HIS HOBBIES.

But not before Mrs. Slater and her daughters had become well acquainted with "Piggie." In fact given him [illegible] and learned all about [illegible] eccentricities.

[illegible] hates to be alone—he positively [illegible] to have company [illegible] Miss Esther Slater [illegible] while he would cry and bark and make [illegible] very rare animal

White baboon which was with the Slaters in French war zone

There's just one other like him in the w[illegible] that we know of and perhaps mamma or Nelson (Miss Slater's [illegible] who got the baboon while on a hunting trip in Africa), will loan him to the Boston Zoo. I think that will be done soon because you see he is so precious that we feel the Zoo people could care for him and prevent anything happening to him."

Even more unique than "Piggie," however, is the lemur, which, while his hostess was asleep or half-awake at night crossing the Atlantic, danced up and down the stateroom floor, swinging its small body to and fro, whisking its squirrel-like tail, its eyes shining in the darkness like flaming topaz balls.

"Peanut," the lemur's pet name, is just as rare as "Piggie," declared Miss Ray Slater. "He came from Africa. Nelson caught him there and sent him to us in France.

EVERYBODY AFRAID OF HIM.

"He came with us on the boat, but we couldn't let him run about on deck because everybody was afraid of him.

Both Piggie and Peanut were a part of the Slater household when Mrs. Slater and her daughters were confined in the Villa Des Terrasses at Deauville and compelled to do their own housework. They were lucky enough to finally get out of the war zone without mishap, but not before they had made pets of the baboon and the lemur.

In England, on their way home, Mrs. Slater donated $10,000 to the Prince of Wales fund to be used in the purchase of tobacco for the British soldiers.

Corns Quit, Pains Stop, With "Gets-It"

Quit Plasters, Salves and What-Nots.

After using "GETS-IT" once you will never again have occasion for asking, "What can I do to get rid of my corns?" "GETS-IT" is the first sure, certain corn-ender ever known.

If you have tried other things by the score and will now try "GETS-IT," you will realize this glorious fact.

You probably are tired sticking on tape that won't stay stuck, plasters that shift themselves right onto your corn, contraptions that make a bundle of your toe and press right down on the corn. Put two drops of "GETS-IT" on that corn in two seconds. The corn is then doomed as sure as night follows day. The corn shrivels. There's no pain, no fuss. If you think this sounds too good to be true try it tonight on any corn, callus, wart or bunion.

"GETS-IT" is sold by druggists everywhere, 25c a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago. "GETS-IT" is sold in Boston by Riker-Jaynes stores.

There was no marked change [illegible] which ended yesterday [illegible] be said that whatever [illegible] curred was for the better [illegible] more confidence in all [illegible] "safety first" considerations [illegible] restricting bankers, merchants and manufacturers.

NEW YORK BANK STATEMENT.

The New York bank statement shows that the reserve deficit decreased $2,064,300 to $33,065,[illegible] during the week, and that among gains for that period were $26,630,000 in loans, $11,806,000 in net deposits, [illegible] in circulation and $4,[illegible] in specie. There has been no change of consequence in the money market either in New York or Boston.

There is not much doing anywhere in regard to time loans, and lenders are holding to cash as much as they can. In fact money market [illegible] is exceedingly contracted.

It is reported from New York, as an indication of improvement in sentiment, that Standard Oil stocks have advanced on the Curb there, gains ranging from 2 to 15 points. As for [illegible] standard issues [illegible] the big exchange it is stated that prices are ranging higher than a week ago, but are still lower than when trading ceased on July 30. When the New York exchange shut down outstanding contracts involved a balance of about $100,000,000. That is said to have practically been disposed of and now the chief obstacle to resuming business is, in the opinion of many, fear of foreign liquidation. That peril is lessening, perhaps, in view of the apparent trend of the war. The banking position in this country has been greatly strengthened within a month.

The underwriting of a gold pool of $150,000,000 seems less likely now that the Federal Reserve Board deems it unnecessary to take a hand in any such movement. It was understood when the plan was suggested that government assistance to the extent of $25,000,000 was expected. The Reserve Board thinks successful arrangements to pay the $[illegible] which the city of New York owes to foreigners has so greatly improved the international credits position that this country can afford to await the time when exportation of foodstuffs or other products will give it a better standing as to foreign trade balance.

RAILROADS TO TRY AGAIN.

Since President Wilson has expressed his view as to the railroad problem heads of rail carriers are going to make another effort to get an advance in freight rates. President Willard of the Baltimore & Ohio has been asked to find the best plan of procedure by the heads of other eastern roads. President Underwood of the Erie believes they should not try to reopen the old case, when a five per cent increase was sought, but should [illegible] a new petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission. "I believe," he said, "the wise thing to do at this time is to make a direct petition for higher rates." In some quarters it is hoped that the situation is such the Interstate Commerce Commission may act of its own volition.

The Federal Reserve Act amendment passed by the Senate to broaden the scope of the Aldrich-Vreeland measure is likely to have important business influence. The amendment authorizes banks which are members of the new system to issue emergency notes against commercial paper up to 75 per cent. of unimpaired capital and surplus. The limit of such notes has, in fact, been raised from 30 to 75 per cent. of capital and surplus. The permission granted State banks with capital stock of not less than $25,000 and 20 per cent surplus to issue emergency notes under the Aldrich-Vreeland act is expected to greatly ease the situation in cotton commonwealths.

CHANGE IN SENTIMENT.

The war has [illegible] a change of sentiment in many [illegible] many matters. Hitherto [illegible] a rather unfriendly [illegible] decided opposition [illegible] New York [illegible] South. There was [illegible] tant speculation [illegible] verse to the [illegible] But now there is [illegible] in the South of [illegible] fixes values and [illegible] trading in contracts be [illegible] to when that will [illegible] be told. Perhaps the most [illegible] be said is embodied [illegible] "Plans are under [illegible] will give supplementary [illegible] to the suggestions of the conference committee, and it is hoped that the New York-Liverpool straddle will be adjusted inside of a month.

Specializing on Bugs

There are specialists of various kinds too numerous to mention, but the number of specialists on bugs that infest the household are not so plentiful.

I have given years of my time to the study of household pests and methods to exterminate them.

At first I did this as a matter of self-protection, for I was bothered with different pests and could not get any real relief from them, no matter how many different people I paid [illegible]. Finally I took the matter [illegible] way from [illegible] through my experience [illegible] different powders, [illegible] for each pest, [illegible]

[illegible]

Through the countless thousands of boxes of "Martin's" Pest Exterminators, which have and are being used, I at least have the knowledge that something is being done to destroy these dangerous pests.

You can get them at any drug or department store for 15c or $1, or 10c extra by mail. Sixteen different powders. Specify when ordering.

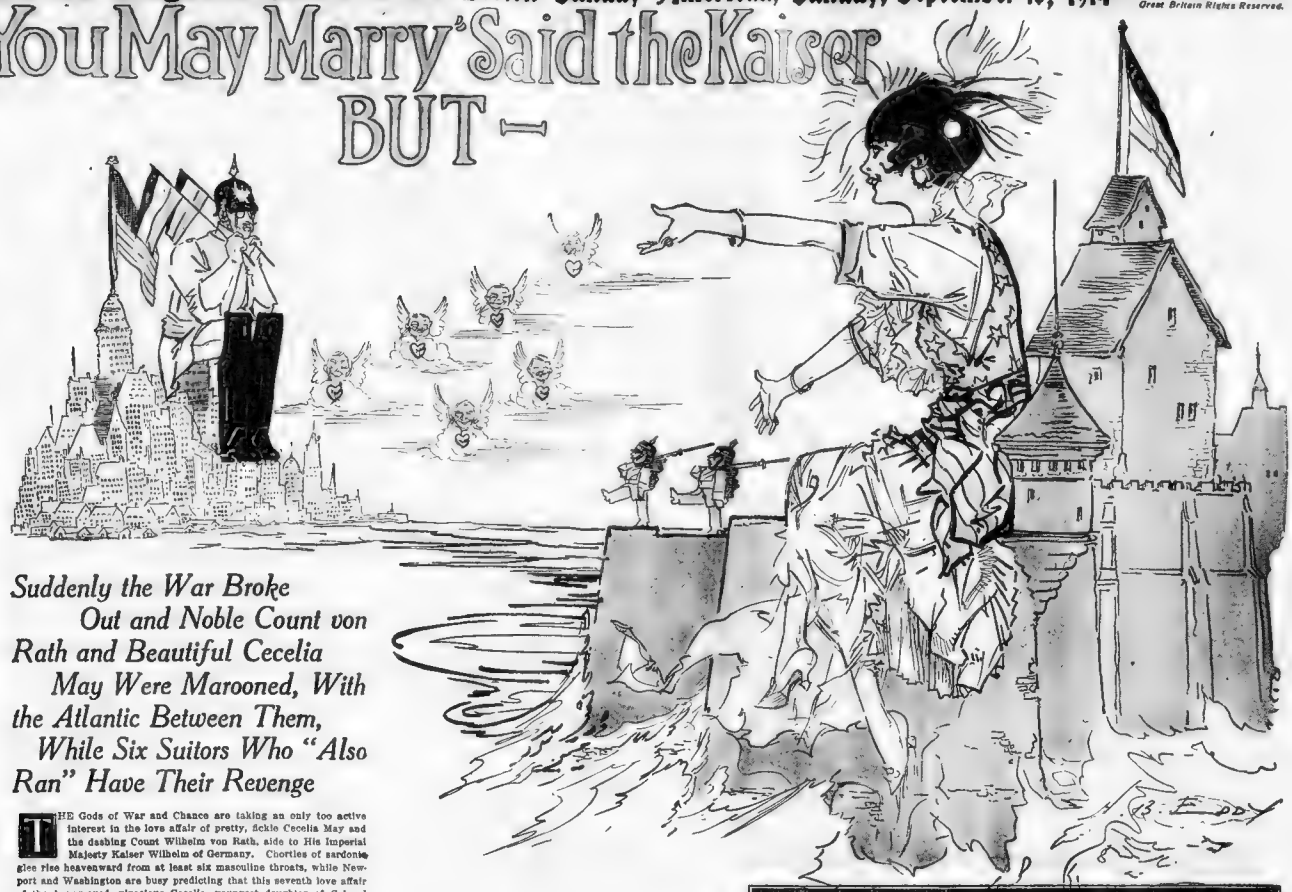
"You May Marry" Said the Kaiser, BUT—



Suddenly the War Broke Out and Noble Count von Rath and Beautiful Cecelia May Were Marooned, With the Atlantic Between Them, While Six Suitors Who "Also Ran" Have Their Revenge

THE Gods of War and Chance are taking an only too active interest in the love affair of pretty, fickle Cecelia May and the dashing Count Wilhelm von Rath, aide to His Imperial Majesty Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany. Chortles of sardonic glee rise heavenward from at least six masculine throats, while Newport and Washington are busy predicting that this seventh love affair of the brown-eyed, vivacious Cecelia, youngest daughter of Colonel May, of Washington, will end as did the other six—and all because the nations of Europe would go to war.

When war broke out the engagement was only a few weeks old. Von Rath, being an officer in the German army, as well as a diplomat at Washington, was ordered back to Germany. And was he thus torn from the fair Cecelia's arms and sent out on the battlefield? He was not, for Cecelia was in Germany herself. Oh, joy! But wait. Neither of the lovers can remove from between them those 3,000 miles of wet ocean. That is war, and war is—— Well, pity the poor Count engaged to a pretty girl, who had already changed her mind six times, and separated from her by war's alarums on the high seas!

Could he get to her? He could not! Goodness knows he tried hard enough. But he was thwarted at every turn. No English, French or Dutch ships would take him, not even when their captains heard his sad and moving love tale. And in the early days of the war there were no German ships leaving this country.

And every time he failed those sardonic gurgles, of a distinctly masculine persuasion, filled the air. Why? Why should any man laugh and be gleeful at the spectacle of two loving hearts being kept apart, first by the Kaiser, then by war? Was it but a joke that this loving American girl should be practically bottled up in Carlsbad, while the lover she left behind her railed and wept forlornly on the shores of these United States?

No: it was really no joke. But, you see, the six sardonic chortles emanated from six very good-looking, very decent young persons who had all at sundry times fallen very deeply in love with Miss May! She had, of course, supposed herself in love, oh, ever so deeply, with each one of them, and only thrown them over—jilted them, so to speak—when she discovered that she had only a sisterly feeling for them. That was all. Only, unfortunately, the members of this masculine sextette were heart-broken when the changeable Cecelia changed her mind, and each one hoped in his heart that some day she would "get hers."

Consequently when the cables to the Philippines flashed the news of Count von Rath's plight one straight-backed army captain and two agile naval lieutenants chortled and hoped he would be kept "guessing" until the war was over.

When Jerry Bonaparte, a descendant of the first Bonaparte, born in New Jersey, heard that "Cece" was actually shut up in Carlsbad, like a truly pathetic princess in a tower, he gurgled:

"It is Kismet," he whispered, and called his friend, Robert Bacon, Jr., on the long-distance:

"Cecelia can't get home and Von Rath can't get to Germany," he burbled into the mouthpiece. "Isn't it one on 'Cece'?"

And Robert Bacon, who was to have married the changeable lady himself a short two years ago, burbled back:

"Well, rather!"

Here perforce are five of the gleeful burblers, all pleased as Punch over the trick Fate is playing on the lovely lady, who loved not only a sailor, but an army officer, two civilians and others.

What of the sixth? He is somewhere between Switzerland and the equator. He was, or is, Henri Martin, the Beau Brummel of the Diplomatic Corps, one time Charge d'Affaires of the Swiss Legation. When "Cece" turned him down two years ago he begged his home government to detach him from the Washington berth he had held for ten years. He is somewhere on the Continent, and his gleeful chuckles are perhaps louder, because nearer, in the ears of the adorable and only-too-often-adored Miss May.

The war caught the Count at Newport. He was engaged to play tennis and to dance the Lulu Fado and perhaps the foxtrot the season through in between doing his duty as a member of the German Embassy. His first thought, noble soldier, was of his country. "I must go to join my regiment. I shall sail at once."

"There was pretty Cecelia May in that German fortress—and there was the noble Von Rath in New York. How the love ghosts of those six broken-hearted suitors must have laughed!"

This was at the Casino the morning after the first declaration of war. He was convoying the Duchess of Marlborough and her mother, Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, to seats by the tennis courts. With his monocle fixed firmly in his eye and an expression of grim determination, the Count advanced on New York.

"Germany is at war, Cecelia, my adored one, is in Germany. I shall see her. I shall clasp her to my heart before going into battle."

But the gods of Chance said nay. There was no steamer out of New York, nor Boston, nor Philadelphia. His Kaiser beckoned. The girl who went before him called, with arms outstretched. But he could not go. He was kept from her as brutally as though chained by the leg.

As his plight became known various disguises were suggested to him. His chum on the staff of the Russian Embassy, Boris Yonine, advised him to sail as an English valet! He does look very like an Englishman—in fact, far more so than the late King Edward did. But not even to see his adored one would he disguise himself.

Why was Miss May in Germany, with her engagement only a few weeks old? She was over there to win the approval of the Kaiser. Because of Von Rath's diplomatic and army connections he had to receive his Emperor's permission to marry the American girl. The Kaiser is not very keen about his officers and diplomats marrying foreigners. In fact, he has expressly forbidden such alliances unless permission is granted by a special court, which meets in Berlin several times a year. Von Rath placed his case before the court early in June, and at the same time the Mays went to Germany, where they have many influential friends, to await results. Miss May was presented to the Kaiser, and just before the war broke out the engagement was sanctioned.

Was it not the irony of fate that even with the august approval the young lovers should be kept apart? But what verdict rises from the throats of those six who went before? They consider that for once the joke is on Cecelia, and even the most soft-hearted of the sextette feels that he is avenged.

Only recently has the Count been able to sail for his Fatherland, but not to clasp his adored one to his heart. He is ordered into immediate active service, and he may not even see his Cecelia before going into battle. If Miss May had not gone to Germany to help win the Kaiser's permission to her engagement, and if war had not broken out, the wedding might have taken place this Summer. Was there ever a more pathetic state of affairs?

Incidentally, Von Rath has plenty of money, and Miss May will have a share of the May wealth, so there were never any financial complications.

The financial part, indeed, might go without telling, for the Kaiser emphatically does not believe in love in a cottage for his army officers. This fact is so well known in smart American families containing marriageable daughters that Miss May undoubtedly was able to present satisfactory proofs to the Kaiser of her eligibility in that respect.

Equally Von Rath's ability to "raise the needful" without appeal to his American heiress future wife will endear him to the social powers on this side of the Atlantic—who are outgrowing their former enthusiasm for titles which are out-at-elbows.

Miss Cecelia May, Whose Latest Love Affair Is the Sport of War.

Row of Dogs at St. Petersburg Institute of Physiology with Permanent Openings in Their Stomachs Through Which the Gastric Juices Are Collected.

A [illegible] Pavlov [illegible] St. Petersburg [illegible] scientist [illegible] digestive glands [illegible] Pavlov has [illegible] that the food [illegible] in a practical [illegible] all the parts of the digestive system [illegible] the different types of digestive secretion can be collected [illegible]

[illegible] to the animal. It remains [illegible] and apparently [illegible] the [illegible].

One of Pavlov's most [illegible] was to make an opening into the pancreas of the dog so that the pancreatic juice whose digestive function is imperfectly understood, will flow outward. He has also separated the stomach of the dog into two portions, one of which, called the "large stomach," continues to perform the regular functions of that organ, while the other, called the "little stomach," is completely isolated but continues to secrete gastric juice. The professor has also fixed in the salivary glands a permanent tube, which carries the saliva out of the mouth.

By these methods he has succeeded in obtaining pure digestive juices unmixed with food from animals in perfect health. His experiments have proved a vast amount of important facts concerning our digestion.

Dog at the St. Petersburg Institute with Permanent Opening Through Which the Digestive Saliva Is Gathered.

For instance, he has proved that the stomach secretes a quantity of digestive juice in proportion to the amount of food taken in, but the composition of the [illegible] to the composition of the food eaten [illegible] due to [illegible] action [illegible] the walls of the stomach [illegible] by the [illegible] of [illegible].

T[illegible] in the production of the gastric juice. One is chemical, but the other and the most important one is "psychic" or mental, as we might say. This is shown by the following experiment. A dog that receives an ordinary meal of ten ounces of meat secretes during the following hour about four-tenths of an ounce of very active gastric juice. On the other hand, a dog whose oesophagus has been opened and whose stomach receives directly the same amount of meat, secretes in the same time only one-tenth of an ounce of gastric juice showing that this amount is due to chemical action.

The dog who has received a "fictitious repast," that is to say, who has eaten meat which has not reached his stomach because it has fallen out through the hole in his throat secretes during the following hour three-tenths of an ounce of very active gastric juice. This latter is the psychic juice, also called appetite juice. It is the first of the two kinds to be secreted, and it is much the most important, both in quantity and in effect. The discovery of this juice has given us information not only about the animal's digestive apparatus, but also about his mental life, sensations, desires and nervous system.

[illegible] When [illegible] to the mouth of the dog, drops [illegible]

pat anything [illegible] the mucous glands [illegible] water saliva. When he [illegible] it with a piece of meat, a thick saliva flowed. When [illegible] dry bread [illegible] was an abundance of saliva [illegible] for this kind of food. When the dog was offered a moist food there was less saliva than [illegible] even when he had a great desire for [illegible] kind of food.

When the dog [illegible] mouth, a certain amount of saliva is secreted [illegible] action. That is called an unconditional [illegible]. The permanent salivary outlet made by Pavlov [illegible] him to gather this saliva and measure its quantity, to analyze it, to count the number of drops and to record its rate of flow.

Various associations of ideas are observed in the dog through these experiments. For example [illegible] gives a dog [illegible] food several times to the accompaniment of a certain sound. After a time [illegible] will produce the psychic juice as soon as he [illegible] sound, without seeing or touching any food. [illegible] what the professor calls a conditional reflex. [illegible] conditional reflexes have been obtained by means of lights, sounds and odors, heat and cold, mechanical irritations, etc.

The professor has proved a large number of facts about the mental abilities of the dog. He has shown that the dog can distinguish sounds separated by [illegible] one-eighth of a tone, especially if the two sounds are produced not more than ten or fifteen minutes [illegible] from one another.

The dog, on the other hand, does not distinguish the different colors and gives up his saliva [illegible] quantity before a red, green, blue, violet, yellow or [illegible] light. The animal distinguishes very quickly [illegible] ment of objects and much more slowly their form. [illegible] localizes with great exactness tactile excitations [illegible] is to say, spots where it is touched. It can [illegible] various forms of excitants, such as several [illegible] notes of music or a scratching and a cold [illegible] at the same time.

It is a very interesting sight to see rows of [illegible] at the St. Petersburg Institute, all fitted with [illegible] them to yield up their different [illegible]. They appear to be perfectly [illegible] of them go voluntarily to the experimenter at the hour when he is accustomed to collect their [illegible].

Why CLARET Is Almost a TEMPERANCE DRINK

MANY physicians [illegible] enjoy better health if [illegible] the example of the French [illegible] good claret [illegible] our meals [illegible] palate [illegible] almost [illegible]

[illegible] it has been customary for some time past to recommend weak [illegible] water as a safe beverage. The danger here, however, is that of overstepping the alcoholic allowance.

The simplicity of genuine claret is accountable for its well known sensitiveness, which, perhaps, has brought it into disfavor [illegible] some quarters. Its flavor is particularly evanescent, delicate, and is easily spoiled by careless management. But the fact that claret will not keep sound more than a few hours after opening precludes the suggestion of preservatives, including extraneous alcohol, being added.

As a rule, the best clarets are the most liable to become unsound. The coarse, fortified clarets keep longer for obvious reasons. Connoisseurs value sound claret for its exquisite flavor and delicacy of character.

Not so many years ago the fine wines of the Medoc, including all the superior classed growths [illegible] them alone, commanded relatively big prices, but nowadays many excellent wines can be purchased showing all the pleasing qualities of the genuine high-class Medoc wines at a very reasonable figure. Excellent genuine wines, especially of the vintages 1907 and 1909, from the best districts of Medoc and St. Emilion and [illegible] well known growths as the Cha[illegible] Beychevelle, Leoville [illegible] and others are not at a [illegible] priced, while there is a large choice of wines of exceptional quality at considerably lower prices.

It is very doubtful, according to a writer in the Lancet, whether the supply of sound and really superior clarets was ever so good, so cheap and so plentiful as it is now.

From the point of view of alcohol, it is safe to say that if for beverage purposes at dinner [illegible] for [illegible] spirits, liqueurs and so forth, there would be much less alcohol consumed, to the unquestionable advantage of the consumer. Also the aesthetic palate would gain by those agreeable wholesome impressions which good Medoc wines are invariably capable of giving, and appetite is thus helped.

Where It Was HOTTEST Last Year

THE "hottest" spot in the United States during 1913 was the city of Columbus, Ga. This statement does not refer to the city's climate, but to the amount of property destroyed by fire there in proportion to the population. "Hot spots" is the term applied by underwriters and others interested in fire prevention to the places where the flames do the most damage.

In Columbus last year the fire loss averaged $11 for every man, woman and child. If a similar amount of damage had been done throughout the country the nation's total loss for the year would have been nearly $4,000,000,000.

The reason why Columbus was the hottest spot last year was improper construction and insufficient protection against fire of a compress where thousands of bales of cotton were stored.

Other cities which won the unpleasant distinction of being extremely "hot spots" last year were Cohoes, N. Y.; Gloversville, N. Y.; Ottumwa, Iowa, [illegible] Mich.; Quincy, Ill.; Dayton, Ohio, Dubuque, Iowa, and East St. Louis, Ill.

In most of these cities the great damage was due to the same avoidable causes which prevailed in Columbus, with the addition, in one or two cases, of poor water pressure.

Why It May Be SAFE to EAT OYSTERS

IN the minds of a great many people the oyster has for a long time run a close second to the house fly as a carrier of disease. Many who prefer it to almost any other articles of food have either banished it from their tables or eaten of it very sparingly for fear it would make them ill.

Until recently this suspicion had the support of science, which attributed a large amount of the typhoid fever prevalent in certain localities during the Winter [illegible] oysters [illegible] by sewage. Now, however, many scientists are beginning to wonder whether we have not been maligning the oyster, and some of them go so far as to say that our fears about it have no foundation in fact.

In the first place the methods of raising and marketing oysters are so carefully regulated [illegible] germs on a wholesale scale must be [illegible].

It is also claimed that the oyster's biological habits furnish pretty conclusive proof that it is not so dangerous as we have always thought. During cold weather oysters rest or hibernate. All movement ceases, and no feeding occurs. During this hibernating period, even if oysters are living in sewage-polluted beds, they will become practically free of the sewage organisms which cause disease.

[illegible] is the greatest oyster market in the country. For this reason Professor Joseph, of Johns Hopkins University, selected it as the place for an exhaustive bacteriological examination of all sorts and conditions of oysters.

The investigation revealed in the [illegible] organisms which are always present in water but these were found to hold no danger for human beings. Practically all the oysters sold from the open market in Baltimore proved to be absolutely free from sewage contamination or anything which could make them harmful to us.

The few lots which the investigation showed to be dangerous [illegible] human consumption [illegible] obtained at times of the year when the weather was quite warm. This fact emphasizes the advisability of not attempting to prolong the oyster-eating season beyond the limits of the colder months.

SCIENCE NOW KNOWS--

WHY CURRANTS ARE GOOD FOR US.

CURRANTS, in spite of their rather insignificant place on our bills of fare, are decidedly beneficial to humanity. For their chief constituents, potash, tartaric acid—which give them their sharpness—and grape sugar, all easily digested substances, all have value. English dietitians, especially, harp on the health-preserving qualities of this small fruit.

AN ELECTRIC NET FOR INSECTS

AN effective method of exterminating grasshoppers and other insect pests has been devised in the Argentine Republic. An alternating current generator operated by a gasoline motor, is mounted on a cart, which also carries about 200 yards of cable. Through the latter a current [illegible] is placed on the ground [illegible] of trees. In the centre of this [illegible] is a transformer which raises the tension to 6,000 volts, sufficient to kill not only all the insects but all their eggs over a wide area.

A NEW CURE FOR LEAD POISONING

BY plunging the victim of lead poisoning into a bath similar to that used by printers for electrotype plates the poison is drawn from his [illegible], and he is usually cured after two or three baths. The effectiveness of this method is shown by the fact that after a sufferer has been given the bath large deposits of lead are found both on the electrodes and in the water.

SHEEP WITHOUT TAILS.

A NEW breed of sheep without tails and bearing great lobes of fat on their rumps has been introduced into South Dakota from Siberia.

A NEW THERMOMETER.

PROFESSOR LEONARD HILL, the well-known scientist, has invented an instrument known as the katathermometer, which records the rate of cooling of the atmosphere both at foot level and head level. By its means the rate of cooling on an ideal Spring day can be discovered, forming a model for regulating the temperature of rooms.

How BETTER ROADS Are To Be BUILT OF RUBBER

RUBBER roads, [illegible] they may not be immediately practicable, are almost [illegible] But [illegible] work [illegible] Association [illegible] grant of 1,000 [illegible] offered an [illegible] price of 25 cents per pound during the next five years. The rubber will be used in the first instance on difficult English roads, in order definitely [illegible].

Already the association has taken practical [illegible] award [illegible] gold medal to M. M. [illegible] for his successful piece of experimental [illegible] way as laid down in the [illegible] In Mr. Desseau's [illegible] wood blocks are used with a [illegible] of rubber [illegible] rightly in post-[illegible] dovetailing.

[illegible] readily moveable [illegible] of frequent subterranean [illegible] gas, water [illegible] hydraulic power, and [illegible] interlock perfectly [illegible] watertight joints, such as [illegible] be obtained in any other [illegible] This prevents the ingress of moisture and the consequent damaging of the road foundations.

It is claimed that the latter do not require to be nearly so strong in the case of rubber roads as with ordinary wood blocks. The reason is that the vibration of the heavy traffic [illegible] concrete is in excess of the now frequently adopted twelve-inch standard.

The fact that thinner foundations can be used with rubber roads can be set against the extra cost of the rubber blocks, though even then the costs will not be equal. But the life of the rubber [illegible] of silence and the prevention of skidding and sideslip of vehicles.

The latter claim may at first sight appear a somewhat remarkable one, but it is a fact that the rubber road sections that have already been laid have proved to be most effective "non-skids." Even when covered with oil, or when blackleaded, the rubber road does not appear to cause motor vehicles to slip. This was hardly expected when the first sections [illegible] of disaster [illegible] was enormous [illegible] prohibitive rates when one section was being laid down, and a guarantee had to be given to the [illegible] to insure.

[illegible] carrying for 295 days some of the heaviest traffic in London, amounting to ninety tons per square foot per hour for twenty-four hours was not perceptibly worn, whereas an adjacent 4-inch wood block lost half an inch in thickness in the same time under the same load.

New Way to DETECT POISONS

C[illegible] ners and [illegible] interested in [illegible]

Hereafter when a person dies under circumstances suspicious of poison, the mixture of his or her stomach contents or other tissues will be taken to a physical laboratory and exposed to the quartz-lensed spectroscope with a sparking light from iron. If any of these five poisons are present their characteristic lines will show in the ultra-violet part of the spectrum and the exact cause of death will be revealed. A quartz-lensed spectroscope is used instead of glass, because glass cuts out the ultra-violet rays.

The most minute particle of poison can now be detected in this revolutionary fashion. Even as little as one five-hundredth of a grain [illegible] was thus found by Dr. Dobbie.

How Far House FLIES TRAVEL

DR. J. T. N[illegible], an English physician who has [illegible] much attention to the spread of disease by flies, finds that [illegible] does not readily leave [illegible] protection, warmth [illegible] situated near places [illegible] breed—where garbage is deposited or refuse from stables is kept unduly long suffer from a plague of flies not [illegible] in the next street further [illegible].

These nearer houses effect a considerable arrestment of the spread of flies. In these infested houses although fly-paper may kill hundreds, just as many are found twenty-four hours later if the windows are left open and the weather is warm.

Where flies are numerous they decrease in numbers in different houses in inverse ratio to the distance from the breeding ground. Flies fly farther when places of arrestment, in the shape of houses, are few or far off.

Where houses are few, more flies will be found in houses half a mile from the breeding [illegible] Where houses are numerous [illegible] will travel more than a quarter of a mile.

How You Can ADD TWO INCHES to Your HEIGHT

THE [illegible] African pygmies are a powerful, useful little people. They are dwarfs, but [illegible] about two and a half feet in height. Beside a native Kaffir they look like toy dolls.

No American man or boy cares to resemble a toy doll. And every man who measures five feet six inches or less in height has hidden away in his heart a wish to be taller.

This desire to be tall has been all the more marked since anthropologists have begun to assert that the human race is growing smaller and smaller, and that all large animals, like the giraffe, the whale, hippopotamus, rhinoceros and elephant, are destined to be extinct within the next three generations.

This hope of man to grow tall has until lately been denied him by science. It has always been maintained that after the bones have hardened at twenty years of age or thereabout there would no longer be any chance to reach the goal [illegible].

Many physical culturists and directors of gymnasia [illegible] medically trained persons [illegible] theoretical the "impossibility" [illegible] making grown men tall and to try to devise something that would accomplish the desired end.

Happily for all short men this "something" has been found. The discovery was aided by the finding by zoologists that the soft, rubberlike tissue called cartilage begins slowly to take on a new growth and to spread in the direction in which it is relieved from bony pressure.

Bones, true enough, do not grow much during and past middle life. If, however, the bones are pulled apart and kept free from pressing upon the intervening cartilages, these will gradually grow and expand to a [illegible] table [illegible] has been proved by a [illegible] experiments conducted by Professor Davis B. Cropp, director of physical training at Colorado University.

Professor Cropp used a squad of students and other men whose ages ranged from twenty to forty years. His method was to strap them upon a table, the leaves of which could be pulled out by turning a crank.

For two years these men were regularly stretched in this way. They gained in height more than two inches on the average. Since one inch makes a tremendous difference in the height of any one, it can readily be appreciated what such a large gain as two and more inches means.

The experimental table with improvised stretching braces has been developed into a simple [illegible] frame work of tubes [illegible] pet or hammock-like material is [illegible] pipes, and the [illegible] upon this every day for two years.

If you are a bit bent, if you are round shouldered, if your work has given you a habitual stoop or if you are not tall enough, this device of Professor Cropp's will not only lengthen and straighten you, but strengthen you as well.

While the cartilages are thickening to increase the length of the spinal column and [illegible] height, they are also increasing their effectiveness in other directions. They protect the spinal cord from any jar which might otherwise result from having the bony vertebra too close together. They also protect the numerous nerves and blood vessels which pass through the cartilage on their way to other parts of the body.

Any shrinkage of the cartilage results in [illegible] chances of a serious [illegible] to the spinal cord [illegible] greatly multiplied and [illegible] by increasing the pressure on [illegible] vessels reduces the capacity of the [illegible] extent of damage which [illegible] depends [illegible] upon the amount of shrinkage. Very often it [illegible] pronounced that practically all the blood supply is shut off from some portion or portions of the body. Often a nerve is killed, or so irritated by the vertebral pressure as to become useless, and partial paralysis results in the part it supplied.

The tone of the muscles must vanish before decrease of the nourishing blood and nerve supply. The stoop, so often apparent even in middle age, is nine times out of ten the result of an unconscious attempt to relieve pinched nerves somewhere along the spine, and to guard against the nervous shock which any jar of the body produces upon the flattened cushions.

Dorothy Russell Beats Mamma Lillian's Famous Record!

Each Having Acquired Husband No. 4, They Would Be Neck and Neck in the Race for Matrimonial Stakes, but for Superior Speed Shown by Daughter's Past Performances

Dorothy Russell Solomon, as She Appeared in "The Country Girl."

IS it perfectly proper for the daughter of a much married mamma to publicly throw down the gage of rivalry? Can it be called seemly for such a daughter actually to make the pace and seize the matrimonial record which the whole world has proudly accorded to her mamma?

Should the recent conduct of Dorothy Russell be declared unfilial?

Ought a loyal public to extend sympathy to Lillian Russell—with a vote of confidence in her future?

Or, is the proverb, "All's fair in love and war," to apply also to that supreme event with the fair sex—the Matrimonial Stakes?

In that case, all bets should come off to daughter, for mamma, at last, is clearly outclassed. If you are sceptical, and doubt that such a thing can be, just cast your eye over the "dope sheet" printed elsewhere on this page. Not only respecting the most recent event, but past performances show superior class for Daughter Dorothy over Mamma Lillian all along back, including even the initial event in each case.

This amazing and unsuspected situation was precipitated when, on August 19, Lillian Russell's daughter added No. 4 to her progressive collection of husbands, thereby tying her mother as to number of husbands, but—as the above "dope sheet" plainly indicates—beating her hands down "on points."

The newest husband in the contest is Edward D. O'Reilly, a young broker of Pittsburgh—otherwise unknown to fame. It was very sudden, by way of an elopement to Pleasantville, N. J. Just why Daughter Dorothy should have eloped is a mystery—unless to gain another point over Mamma Lillian, whose record is barren of that romantic element. The marriage permit was issued at Ventnor, N. J., where there is a Lillian Russell Summer home. On the following day the happy couple returned, confessed and were forgiven. Certainly, they are forgiven—else how could Mamma Lillian have written for publication such things as this.

"I believe in re-marriages. If the adage, 'If at first you don't succeed try, try again,' applies to every other condition in life, why not to marriage?"

Matrimonially speaking, Daughter Dorothy has caught up with and outstripped her mother at an age when Mamma Lillian was still trotting amiably along with her No. 2—the same being Edward Solomon, Dorothy's father. She scored a point at the very start, in 1903, by marrying young Louis Einstein at the tender age of seventeen, whereas Mamma Lillian, in 1879, when she married Harry Braham, her musical director, was at the ripe age of eighteen.

It must be admitted, however, that our only Lillian was, even at that early period handicapped with an artistic career. Widely a stage favorite because of her voice and her beauty, she could not give her whole mind to the marrying proposition, as, presumably, Daughter Dorothy could, when, fresh from school in France, her heart was captured by the son of a well-known New York lawyer.

An analysis of the aforementioned "dope sheet" shows that from the initial event to the present time Daughter Dorothy has held her lead in the Russell Stout contest for the Matrimonial Stakes.

In each case the first event was disqualified by a judge of the divorce court. But mark the difference in elapsed time—five years for Mamma Lillian, who divorced Harry Braham in 1884, and only four years for Daughter Dorothy, who was freed from Louis Einstein in 1907.

Mother cut down that disadvantage slightly by starting her second event in the same year that she was off with the first one, whereas Daughter waited a whole year—until 1908—before entering her second race as Mrs. Acha Mura.

But it was at this stage of the contest that Mother had her sharpest setback—elapsed time of ten years still 1884, before the event with Edward Solomon was judicially disqualified; a corresponding gain for Daughter Dorothy, whose elapsed time could have been only two years, for the records show her started in her third event, with Robin Dunsmuir, in 1910.

Mother's third event—with John Chatterton, professionally known as Signor Perugini—resulted in disqualification, in 1898, in the usual manner, elapsed time four years.

Elapsed time for Daughter Dorothy's third event was also four years, as it is in the present year that she starts her fourth event, with young Mr. O'Reilly, of Pittsburgh. But it is with respect to these fourth events that Daughter Dorothy gains her invincible lead—no hiatus between the collapse of Event No. 3 and the start of Event No. 4. Now, just look what a setback Mamma Lillian had at this stage—disqualification of her Event No. 3, in 1898, then a hiatus of fourteen long years before the start of Event No. 4, with Editor Alexander, P. Moore, in 1912!

It is true that the "dope" is a bit vague on Daughter Dorothy's past performances in two particulars, affecting Events No. 2 and No. 3. The dates of disqualification are absent. But something of the kind must have happened, else how could there now be an Event No. 4?

As to the Acha Mura event, Daughter Dorothy made the announcement herself, as reported in the newspapers. In so doing she exhibited with great pride a diamond-studded watch, with her own name engraved upon it in Japanese characters. Her new husband was of the noble Samauri, but also enough of a business man to have accumulated $200,000. She regarded Acha Mura as her soul mate. Ta, ta. They were just taking the boat for Havana, whence they were going to Japan via San Francisco.

This circumstantial account sent a chill down the spines of Daughter Dorothy's friends along the Gay White Way. What, "Dottie" to go and bury herself in Japan with a little brown husbands! Scouts were sent out in all directions.

By and by a scout returned with a story of having found a chum of Dottie's who said that she (Dottie), had been very much shocked at the report that she was Mrs. Acha Mura, and that there was not a word of truth in it. And with all this whip-sawing over the fact of the marriage, is is any wonder that nobody seems certain about the date of the divorce?

But that everything was "quite regular" was made evident when, in December, 1910, Mamma Lillian herself announced that Daughter Dorothy had become the wife of Robin W. Dunsmuir, son of the Honorable Governor of British Columbia.

Had Robin Dunsmuir secured a divorce from his first wife?

"He had," said Daughter Dorothy.

"He told me so himself," said Mamma Lillian.

Shortly before this Robin had lied himself away to Far Cathay—that is, to the mining regions of Peru. When his opinion was sought—whether or not he had been off with the old before he was on with the new—he was still in Peru.

But is that a sufficient reason for casting asparagus at Daughter Dorothy's Matrimonial Stakes record?

Protecting the Public with Vacuum Street Sweepers

IN Manchester, England, the municipal authorities, realizing the great dangers of ordinary street sweeping, have been experimenting with a vacuum street sweeper that proved so successful it has been widely recommended throughout England.

Of course, the dry sweeping of streets is abominable and dangerous to the public health, especially when done during the day by the rotary brushes. Done at night after first watering the street is much better, but it cannot all be cleaned up; next day's sun dries that which remains, and wind and traffic stir the unhealthy dust about.

It scarcely seems possible that dry sweeping of streets would be allowed these days, but it is done. One of the big streets running through East Orange, N. J., owned by the county, is swept by the dry process and in the forenoon. At times it is necessary to close the windows of houses, although they set back thirty-five feet from the street, to prevent the dust from pouring into the windows.

With the vacuum street-sweeper all this danger is done away with. Also the necessity of first watering the streets is done away with, and this, of course, saves a lot of money. This vacuum street-sweeper is run with a motor. The mechanism consists of a cylindrical brush composed of a series of small brushes which revolve in an airtight sheet iron shell in an opposite direction to that of the wheels of the sweeper. These brushes in the airtight shell revolve at the circumferential speed of 4,950 feet per minute, and in turning two-thirds of a revolution inside the shell raises the sweepings and discharges them into boxes in the receiver at the back of the vehicle. During one of the tests the machine swept 130 square yards of street surface per minute, collecting one-ninth of a ton of material, and at this time the air about the sweeper was dustless—that is, there being no more dust perceptible than there was when an ordinary carriage drove along.

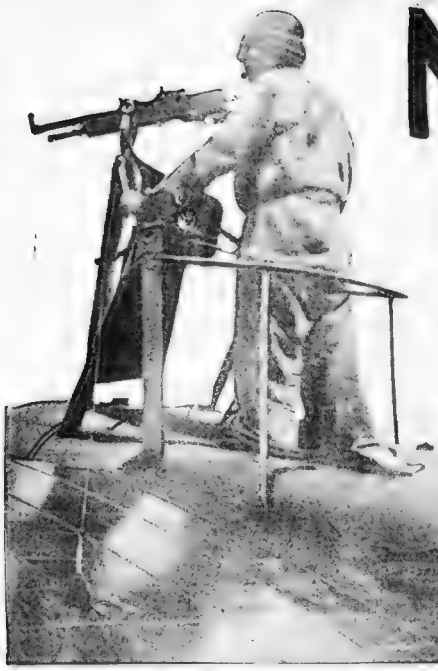
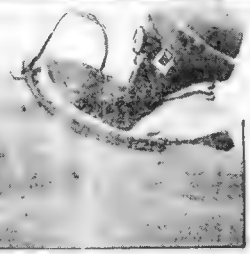
New Deadly Devices of War

How Man's Wonderful Genius for Mechanical Progress Has Been Misdirected Toward Scientific Slaughter and Destruction.



One of the Enormous Searchlights Mounted on a German War Automobile.



The Deck of an Armored French Aeroplane, Showing the Airman-Gunner at the Breach of the Rapid-Firing Gun Mounted Above the Planes.

FIVE years ago the prospect of a war in the air was regarded a fantastic vision.

There were indications that it might be possible, but it seemed too fantastic and inhuman to be true.

To-day it is a terrible reality.

Along a battle line of 300 miles French, German, Belgian and Austrian aviators are grappling with one another thousands of feet up in the air, and falling to the ground in death agonies.

This is, above all, a war of scientific machines. From the dirigible balloon in the heights of the air to the submarine in the depths of the sea there are thousands of scientific devices for killing men. It is a clash of human flesh against intelligent machines.

We know that the Germans have perfected the greatest faith in their great dirigible balloons of the Zeppelin and Parseval types. These are capable of carrying upward of twenty-five men each and hundreds of pounds of high explosive far more powerful than dynamite.

Perhaps the most appalling suggestion of the possibilities of this aerial war was contained in the announcement that a fleet of fifty Zeppelins had sailed from Lake Constance, in Southern Germany, their principal place of manufacture, to attack the French and Belgians in the rear.

Against these great German dirigibles the French have an unlimited supply of aeroplanes piloted by the most daring aviators in the world. France is believed to possess a thousand aeroplanes and over two thousand aviators. The supply of both can be increased very quickly.

The German dirigible can rise to a height of 10,000 feet, where it must be very difficult, if not impossible, for an aeroplane to reach. The big machine keeps its men warm and comfortable, while the French aviators must suffer from bitter cold. The dirigible is composed of eighteen or more balloonets, with complete envelopes, so that one shot cannot wreck the construction. The gas, moreover, is said to be non-explosive. Both dirigibles and the larger aeroplanes are armed with quick-firing guns.

Most of the French war aeroplanes now carry two men. One is the pilot and the other manipulates a quick-firing gun that shoots 150 bullets a minute.

The swift little aeroplanes will circle around the slow, monstrous dirigibles like sharks round a whale, each side shooting viciously at one another. Both kinds of vessels are provided with steel grappling hooks and cables, with which they will try to upset one another in the air. Can a little aeroplane upset a huge Zeppelin with its grappling hook? It has already been reported that in some cases the French aviators are turning themselves into human bullets and sacrificing their lives in order to wreck German dirigibles by hurling their light machines into them.

The Eiffel Tower, that rises a thousand feet above the roofs of Paris, is mounted with quick-firing machine guns to destroy German Zeppelins and aeroplanes that may attack the heart of France. Such a conflict in the air would surpass the wildest visions of those who have tried to imagine the warfare of the future.

The cathedral towers of France are armed with quick-firing guns for a similar purpose and so are most of the high buildings of the country. Imagine a duel between a Zeppelin and the exquisite towers of Rheims Cathedral! Strange conflict between the present and the past!

The Germans say that their dirigibles can pass over the stormy North Sea, dynamiting the British ships and then pass into England, destroying the cities, fortresses and naval ports of that country.

In order to help maintain their mastery of the sea the English have great numbers of ingenious little fighting machines provided with additional planes, which can glide easily over the surface of the sea. They will be particularly deadly, it is expected, in attacking ships in harbors, where the water is calm and especially at night. The British navy is known to possess at least 200 of these fighting machines, and it is quite possible that they possess more. Six can be carried on a battleship.

A daring pilot of a water plane will dash boldly at an enemy's ships, taking all risks. He may drop a bomb down a battleship's funnel, wrecking the engines, or, sinking down to the water, place it beneath the stern, sinking the ship. The water-going feature of the machine offers great advantages. Flying along at right near the surface of the water, the aviator is practically invisible until very near the ship. If his flying planes are damaged he will not be lost, for he can remain on the water until picked up.

If the English attack the German naval forts and coast fortifications it is expected the water planes will play a great part. The Germans on their side will have dirigible balloons, submarines and other scientific devices. In their great naval port of Wilhelmshaven, defending the Kiel Canal, the Germans have an enormous number of great guns of heavy calibre and upwards.

It would appear suicidal for a British commander to put his battleships up against the fire of enormous guns in fixed positions, but he can send an hundreds of water planes, risking only a man or two with each, to dynamite the German ships and wreck the big guns in their pits.

Both armies are supplied with special guns for bringing down fighting aircraft. The Germans are said to have the most terrible weapon of this kind. They realize the difficulties they may have in dealing with the vast swarm of French aeroplanes. Some of the French military aviators can fly at a speed of 125 miles an hour.

To hit such a speeding aeroplane is an enormously difficult task. When the gun is fired from the ground its power is reduced by the fact that it is firing against the force of gravity, and the whole theory of gunnery of other wars is upset by this fact.

To meet these conditions the German aeroplane gun is constructed so that the gunner aims by looking at a mirror beneath him. He is not confused and distracted by having to look up in the air. The mirror is divided into squares, and the gunner sights the weapon with mathematical accuracy as the flying machine crosses a certain square.

The gun fires an enormously powerful shrapnel shell, which can be regulated to burst at any height up to three miles. There is a dial on the shell on which the gunner marks the height at which it is to burst. The shell on bursting spreads over an area of a thousand square feet, so that the gunner is practically aiming at an object of that size.

Night has always in past wars put a complete or partial check on the awful work of slaughter. Science has now obviated this difficulty and thus made the horrors of war continuous. The French army are provided with enormously powerful searchlights, which are mounted on automobile trucks. They illuminate a path a thousand yards long and about two hundred yards wide. Marksmanship by guns and rifles can be directed very effectively against all objects, even as small as men, falling within this path of light.

Searchlights have, of course, been used to protect

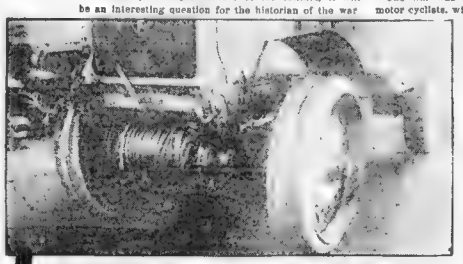
How the Automobile Has Created a New Art of Waging War.

THIS war has been to a remarkable extent a war of automobiles. While the aircraft have been the most picturesque feature of the conflict, it will be an interesting question for the historian of the war to decide whether they or the motor implements have played the most important part in it.

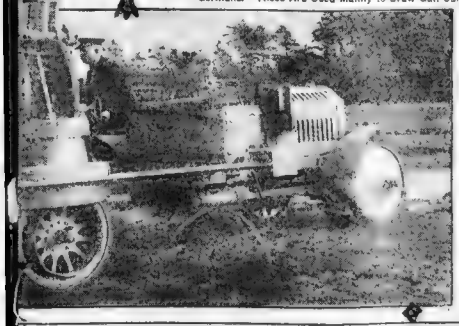
The war was begun by the appearance of German motor cyclists, with rifles slung over their backs, riding over the frontier into Belgium. These men fired the first shots of the war and helped to drive the scanty Belgian forces then on duty behind the Belgian line of fortifications. The cyclists were soon followed by 150 armored automobiles, carrying German officers.

When the attack on Liege was opened, guns mounted on armored automobiles did the most effective work against the defenses of the Belgian lines. It was found possible to move guns more quickly than could be done with horses.

Besides guns mounted on autos, there are the bigger guns hauled by them. Big siege guns of six-inch calibre and upward are dragged into position by specially constructed automobile trucks. These trucks are able to pull the guns over the roughest places and up the steepest hills. It would be practically impossible to move these guns with horses.



The Enormous Cables Carried by the Gigantic Motor War Trucks of the Germans. These Are Used Mainly to Draw Gun Carriages.



In the Boer war the Boers had to use man power to draw the four-inch guns, which did such execution against the British, up their steep hills, because horses were powerless to do the work. In the present war, far bigger guns are being carried quickly into the most difficult positions by automobile power.

Both sides are using these automobile guns. One photograph recently received shows a big French gun drawn by an automobile. Another picture of a British war automobile shows why these machines are able to leave the roads, cross ploughed fields and other rough ground. The wheels are constructed of steel, divided into small squares that hold on to the side of a hill like the claws of a tiger.

Another photograph gives an interesting idea of the tremendous work done by the war automobiles. It shows remarkably thick woven steel-wire cable used by these machines for pulling guns and other objects. Such a cable would easily haul a weight of a thousand tons.

All the principal commanders are using automobiles in which to inspect their forces. Orders are, of course, mainly sent by telephone from headquarters to the field, but there are many reasons why the leaders have to inspect certain positions with their own eyes, to encourage the men and see what is going on there.

General Joseph Joffre, the Commander-in-Chief of the French army, has a racing automobile, run by Louis Jausset, a chauffeur who has won many prizes. This machine can make eighty miles an hour when handled by a skilful man, and the General can, in case of need, reach any part of his three-hundred-mile battle line within two or three hours. The chauffeur is perfectly safe, for he can speed over the splendid roads of France with absolutely no speed restrictions. It is an opportunity that has not existed since the long distance road races in France were abolished, on account of their danger.

While aeroplanes and balloons are largely used for observing the enemy's positions, other more solid devices are provided for this purpose. In older wars scouts used to climb up into church steeples and into high towers in order to gain information of the enemy's positions, and the pressure of such handy elevations often decided a victory.

In this war the Germans have collapsible observation towers a hundred feet high, which are carried by swift automobiles. They can be set up in five minutes and moved away as quickly. An advantage of these towers over the aircraft is that two or three officers of high rank can go up in them and make observations in person. They are often heavy, elderly men, and would be quite unfit or unable to go up in light aircraft.

Strange to say, care for the wounded is not altogether forgotten. There are motor hospitals in the German army, fitted with a dozen beds each, and all the requisites of the surgeon. They will be able to succor wounded men, who in other times would have either been left to die or suffered the horrible agony of being jolted over the field in a horse ambulance. There is no news to suggest, however, that the automobile hospitals are sufficiently numerous to care for one tiny fraction of the wounded.

The auto-trucks are very useful in bringing up supplies of food and of ammunition to the men. In other wars soldiers often suffered defeat because the horse-drawn food supplies failed to reach them in time. An auto-truck, which can haul many tons of food to the firing line, will do much to overcome this difficulty.

Armies have in past wars been lost or crippled through the cutting of a railroad in their rear. The automobiles will, to a certain extent, compensate for a severed railroad line.

The Kaiser has a motor kitchen for use in the field. In this every dish can be cooked as well as in his own palace. Photographs showing this very perfectly equipped kitchen, as it was used by the Kaiser at the army manoeuvres, have been widely published. It is a comfort to think that, while the battle rages all around, His Majesty will be able to enjoy a perfectly cooked meal whenever he wants it.

War Fashions

By Lady Duff-Gordon.

New Charming Model of Military Dress of Semi-Military Cut.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in style for well-dressed women.

London, Sept 6

IT is difficult, indeed, for me to write of fashions with the war horror brooding over all Europe now. Paris is no longer the centre of fashion—it is a place where sorrow and patriotic hope alternate and nothing is thought of except the men who go out to battle, the men who do not return and the preservation of France.

There will be no models shown in Paris this year!

Before the shock came that threw all life here out of its accustomed grooves it was apparent that this was to be a velvet season. The velvet was to be of richest Lyons weave, combined with softest chiffons. It was to have been a costly fashion year in Paris. In colors black was to predominate—a bit of saddening prophecy. There was to have been a great deal, too, of navy blue, bottle green and tete de negre. As an aftermath to the one shade scheme, which was to have been at first the most fashionable, there was to follow a striking contrast of colors for instance, a good portage [illegible] some chiffon velvet colored and bordered with black fox and a skirt of black velvet.

As a material for evening wraps velvet will again be in the foreground in many cases, of course, but more brilliant colorings will be used to splendid effect, and their general "sumptuousness" further increased by broideries of gold or silver and broad borderings of fur.

Then, again, there was to have been—and will be—available for the making of evening gowns [illegible] brocaded with velvet roses and leaves or else petunias [illegible] with Scenery velvet gowns [illegible] are broken into at intervals by a tri-colored shamrock leaf or a cluster of tiny rosebuds, sheltering coolly in a circlet of leaves—sapphire petunia and green being one typical triple alliance of colors.

But even apart from their frequent use as a mere background for this dominant and decorative velvet, the chiffons are going to have a special success on their own account. In many cases they are weighted by heavy metallic designs; tall tapering leaves of silver showing out against a blue as intense as a tropical sea under the noon-day sun, while on another a blur of blossoms in blue and rose and flame and green makes background for other flowers all wrought in gold and lends a new and ever changing beauty of shading to their shining petals.

It would seem, too, that the new "frosted" effects are going to be very popular, and certainly they are very light and pretty, as well as novel. Twisted threads of silver or gold tinsel are used for these designs, which are either broidered or plain ninon, or a pattern printed in many soft shadowy colorings on an old ecru ground.

It has been more difficult than you can know for me to write this,

What Makes the Deep Sea Monsters?

One of the Extraordinary and Grotesque Fishes Which Are Taken from the Lowest Depths of the Sea. Their Strange Shapes, Professor Houssay Finds, Are Caused Entirely by the Enormous Pressure of Water in Which They Live.

Remarkable Experiments by a Famous French Scientist Which Shows Fish Shapes Are Made Entirely by Water Pressure

By FREDERICK HOUSSAY,
Professor at the Sorbonne.

EVERYONE who has seen the weird, grotesque monsters that from time to time are brought up from the lowest depths of the ocean, has wondered what it is that has made them so misshapen. They are like nothing seen on land or in air and they bear no resemblance to the graceful denizens of the shallow reaches of sea.

By a series of experiments we are now able to say that the shape of these deep sea monsters is produced almost entirely by water pressure alone.

To understand how water was able to model the fish we have to understand that every living creature is plastic, that is to say, may undergo some deformation under pressure. To take one example of many, every animal [illegible] if a metal holds itself badly it will become deformed. If I place a boat [illegible] to exercise a pressure in an uneven way, it may cause to one side, it will curve the spinal column very markedly. This deformation may, however, be rectified by proper pressure brought about by a stiff brace or in some other way. If, then, in the course of a few years we see how a body may be modified by slight pressure, can we not understand how enormous pressure exerted for ages can bring about great changes?

What, then, is this great force with which we have to deal? It is the resistance of the water. This is an enormous force.

Having at our disposition the living plastic creature and the great modelling force, it is necessary to detail the conditions in which the latter acts upon the former? The two essential qualities both necessary and sufficient to obtain fish with a plastic nature are that it has the power of displacing rapidly, and that it has the same density as the water. All the rest properly formed weigh, we may say, volume for volume, as much as the water, sometimes a little more sometimes a little less.

Those creatures which are still heavier and at the same time less rapid, are not modelled in the fish at all but into annelids and crustaceans. Other creatures still heavier and at the same time still slower become molluscs, and others that do not move at all fix themselves on the rocks or bury themselves in the bottom and are modelled accordingly.

This explains how it is that although the resistance of the water is always the same it does not always produce the same effects nor act in the same manner, and for this reason all the aquatic creatures though equally plastic, but being of different weights and of different speed, are not at all like each other. This being well understood, it is easy to see how the water may model a plastic creature [illegible] equally dense, that is, weighing just about as much as the equal volume of water. Now there are we experiment so as to obtain [illegible] under which the fish swim?

In order to have a body of a model which will be plastic I use a rubber bag about seven inches long and an inch and a third in thickness. This must be of the density of the water and I fill this with some oil so as to get the exact equal volume. I attach this to a thread so as to draw it through the water. You have only to look at it as the speed has increased, and you will see how the water presses upon the bag. When going very slowly, if the sack was laid flat in the beginning it stays flat, only turning on its axis. If drawn more rapidly the front remains at the horizontal and the back becomes vertical. If the speed be still more increased the number of inversions increases and we can count three, five, seven or more successively horizontal and vertical.

The ripples of the water flee to the back to give place to the body which is penetrating it. In the presence of the obstacle which the form of the sack opposes to their flight they take on an appearance which is repeated with a certain rythm, a vibration, as we call it. The vibration of the water models the soft sack, and this shows us how it works on the fish. It is a very plain application of one of the most beautiful theorems of physics discovered by Lord Kelvin on the vibratory transformation of a ripple in the presence of an obstacle.

The power of swimming in the fish when coupled with its weight and density is the actual explanation of all the modifications which come about in the recesses of the sea. The monsters of the deep are the poor swimmers who have barely escaped in many instances becoming crustaceans and losing the character of fish altogether.

MYSTERIOUS NEW PERIL That Threatens Every FAST TRAIN

How TINY FLAWS Which Cannot Be Detected from the Outside, BREAK the HEAVIEST RAILS and Lead to TERRIBLE DISASTERS

MODERN high-speed railroading faces a new and mysterious peril. Daily this danger grows greater. No one knows where next it may deal its fatal blow.

Through the night races a magnificent limited. With 300 human lives aboard it screams along at sixty miles an hour. All signals are set clear, the track is free, the equipment perfect, the engineer alert, everything runs like a watch. Far ahead the signal lights loom white, the rails gleam like polished silver bands in the headlight rays; the steady rhythm of the throbbing steam chests and the rumbling wheels finds no discord except in the screech of the whistle and the clang of the bell for a crossing.

Suddenly, without an instant's warning, there is a crash—a rail has given way and the whole magnificent train is hurled into the ditch.

No power could have saved it. No forethought, no inspection, no human warning could have prevented that disaster.

It seems terrible that a weakened rail should deal such fearful destruction. And, more terrible yet, that the flaw which caused it is mysteriously hidden and microscopic. But worst of all is the fact that no human omniscience could have foretold that fatal weakness.

This great hazard is a tiny, hidden defect in the rails. At the start the flaw probably was less than one one-hundredth of an inch in length and deep within the rail itself. Only a microscope could have discerned it, even if it were at the surface. But it was not at the surface. It was far within the metal. It gradually grew until it was as large as a thumbnail, and still it could not have been discovered from the outside of the rail.

The experts call it a "transverse fissure." This is the technical name for a crack that starts in the centre of the thickest part of the rail and grows within that centre without the slightest external evidence of its presence—until the rail gives way. Until recently this type of defect was almost unknown. Higher speed, heavier trains and harder steel in the rails are responsible. The higher the speed, the heavier the train and the harder the rail, the greater is this peril of modern railroading.

The experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission have taken the initiative in a vigorous investigation of this new danger. They have been aided by the railroad authorities, as well as by the makers of the rails. Thousands upon thousands of dollars have been spent in a general effort to discover just what it is that causes these fissures, and even more important, how to detect their presence in the rail.

For there lies the greatest danger of this defect. Originating as it does in the head of the rail and away from the surface, it grows to dangerous size before it reaches the surface to reveal itself in a visible crack. But long before it reaches that proportion it usually has done its work, when the rail collapses under some severe strain.

There is nothing in the appearance of an affected rail to reveal such a flaw at any stage before it reaches the surface. Strike it and it has the same sound as a rail that is flawless. Even the most delicate experiments with electrical currents have failed to reveal the presence of these fissures.

What causes these fissures is almost as great a mystery as the fact of their existence. [illegible] hundreds of affected rails [illegible] little light upon this disputed subject. Railroad authorities blame the steel makers. [illegible] it to speed and weight of trains. The [illegible] orities believe that hidden defects in [illegible] of the rails themselves are responsible [illegible] it develop in the service. The [illegible] their rails are perfect, and point to the fact that no such flaws have yet been discovered in unused rails and that they have been found in all portions of rails in actual use, no matter how perfect their [illegible] mechanical composition.

The experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission side with the steel men. H. W. Belnap, Chief Inspector of Safety Appliances of the Commission, has [illegible] dly declared that the fissures are the result of traffic, without reference to [illegible] composition of [illegible]. Just what starts a fissure [illegible] do not pretend to say. They believe [illegible] result of the terrific strain upon the rail, but [illegible] could start at one point of a rail instead of [illegible] they are unable to say.

[illegible] contribute to [illegible] point beneath a rail might [illegible] to fracture a few molecules of [illegible] train might [illegible] the driving wheel of [illegible] one that [illegible] at the moment of [illegible] of the driving wheels of such a mammoth [illegible] itself.

The most significant thing about these "transverse fissures" is the fact that they [illegible] invariably in what is known as the "gauge [illegible]" the "head" of the rail. The "head" of [illegible] thick upper portion upon which the wheels [illegible] run. The "gauge" side is the inner portion of the "head," which comes in contact with the flange or projecting portion of the tire of the car wheel. This, therefore, is the portion of the rail that bears the heaviest burden—a burden not only of weight, but of actual contact. Soft steel rails and the old-fashioned iron rails were rolled out of shape by this pressure. But this very rolling prevented the fissures that are now so dangerous. The modern steel rail is so hard that it will not give under these terrific pressures.

They are always formed at sharp right angles to the length of the rail, another demonstration that they are the result of wheel pressure rather than of internal defect. For if they were the result of a flaw in the molding of the rail they would run longitudinally because of the lengthening of the "ingot," the bar of red hot metal out of which the rail is rolled.

The investigations of the experts have traced these fissures down to such tiny fractures that under microscopic magnification of 315 diameters, they are [illegible] one-hundredth of one inch in length. But even in that early stage of their development nothing has been disclosed that would throw the slightest light upon their origin and cause. In no case have they been found to be accompanied by any difference in the composition of the surrounding metal.

"From the constant increase in rail [illegible] ages occurring from this new [illegible] of failure," declares that latest report of Mr. Belnap, "it would appear that the danger zone in the use of rails as at present manufactured has been reached, since the [illegible] rails here under discussion [illegible] appears to indicate that transverse fissures are the direct result of [illegible] pressures acting upon [illegible]. A complete investigation [illegible] track and wheel load conditions [illegible] the purpose of determining [illegible] thereon of the recent types [illegible] and cars, with their [illegible] wheel loads, should be undertaken for the purpose of scientifically determining this matter and ascertaining a remedy."

Mr. Belnap cites statistics for eleven years beginning July 1, 1901, showing that 2,762 accidents were the result of derailments caused by [illegible] rails, and that in these [illegible] persons were killed, 6,0[illegible] injured and the property damages totaled [illegible]7,793.

"To those elements of danger existing in the past," says this Government official, "is now added this type of failure shown in the development of interior fissures. On account of the hidden character of these fissures and the fact that they are progressive in their development, and, so far as known, no system of inspection has been found that will detect them until they have reached the surface of the rail, it is extremely difficult to suggest any preventive against future accidents of this character.

"Although, as noted in previous reports dealing with rails failing on account of transverse fissures, it seems apparent that a remedy lies in the diminishing of wheel [illegible] and the lowering of direct compressive bending [illegible] bearing stresses."

For those who like technical descriptions here is an [illegible] from the report made to Chief Inspector Belnap by James E. Howard, the engineer physicist who [illegible] examination of the rail that caused the terrible [illegible] wreck at Westerly, R. I., October 25, [illegible] talking of the general traffic dangers revealed by his investigation:

"[illegible] the prevalence of transverse fissures in [illegible] microscopic order, not referring at this [illegible] microscopic, of such dimensions as are [illegible] safety of railway travel, they are [illegible] numerous. Forty-six transverse fissures [illegible] occurrence have been reported in thirty- [illegible] instances have been reported in which five [illegible] have been found in the same rail [illegible] of three feet. They are present in both open-hearth and Bessemer steels.

"In their maximum state of development they have [illegible] in 100-pound rails, having attained a superficial area of 13 square inches, leaving practically only the [illegible] and the base intact. Our investigation shows without question that these hidden fissures in some rails reach such a state of development before discovery as to destroy nearly the entire head of the rail. [illegible] not reassuring that other [illegible] working under similar conditions of service are not free from these interior defects. The continuance of conditions which have resulted in derailments, attended with loss of life and injury to passengers and employes, places a great responsibility upon all who can in any manner aid in the inauguration of measures which will tend immediately to ameliorate these grave conditions."

WHEN THEY GET THROUGH —

LET US HAVE PEACE

Let the Great American Nation Use Its Influence to Prevent Europe from Inviting Disaster from Asia.

THERE is no reason for the American people to express or entertain partisan sentiments in regard to this great conflict now raging in Europe.

We as a people deplore the war. We condemn the monarchical systems, the imperial policies, the mediæval traditions, the aggression of States and the arrogance of kings which are responsible for this inexcusable destruction of our fellow human beings, this unpardonable assault upon the foundations of our social system and of our civilization.

We sympathize most deeply with the various peoples, our friends and brothers in humanity, who are compelled by the force of events which they could not foresee and circumstances which they could not control to take brave but bloody part in the war.

Sympathy with our fellows in distress and disaster is our duty, but not our full duty. It must be within the power of this great nation, which all the combatants respect and whose good opinion all value, to effectively intervene in some legitimate way to prevent the continuance of this cruel and calamitous war.

The nations of Europe must already have reached a point where they realize, more than they possibly could have realized before the event, the extent of the destruction and disaster which they are inflicting and inviting.

Europe is committing hari-kari on the doorsteps of Asia.

The civilized nations of Europe are destroying each other and the civilization which they have laboriously constructed through centuries.

Germany and Austria stand and have stood for ages as the first line of Europe's defense against the invading hordes of Asia.

France and Belgium and Italy are Europe's second line of defense, and England is its mighty defense at sea.

There is no rightful reason for internecine conflict among the defenders of Europe. They should present a united front to external dangers, and exercise their combined power against the threat of Asiatic invasion.

What good will it do England and France and Belgium to weaken Germany and Austria, and thereby weaken their first and chief protection against the invading hordes of Asia?

What good will it do Germany and Austria to weaken France and Belgium and England, whose aid and whose utmost strength they may at any time need to support themselves in their mighty task of repelling Oriental assault?

Why should Europe decimate its forces and destroy its own power, when at any time its whole force and its full power and its united effort may be needed in a supreme struggle to rescue the civilization of Europe from submersion in an overwhelming flood of barbarism?

"Let us have peace," and let this great American nation exercise its power and influence in behalf of humanity and human progress.

Furthermore, America is almost as much concerned as Europe in the menace of Asia. We do not come into immediate contact with it in the East as the countries of Europe do, but we are coming into closer and closer contact and eventual and inevitable conflict with it on our West.

For reasons of selfish interest, as well as of human interest, therefore, is it America's duty to exert its utmost influence to conserve and unite under the banners of peace and progress the forces of civilization.

Let us raise our voice so loudly, and exercise our influence so strongly, that Europe will be compelled to stop for a moment and to listen to the voice of reason, to the appeal of humanity, to consider for a moment not merely our interests but their own interests, the interests of all civilization, the best interests of the whole human race.

Peace upon terms honorable to all can be secured, and the wealth and the power and the legions of Europe preserved and reserved for a greater purpose—not for the destruction of civilization, but for its sure protection in the crises to come.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

OVER and over again, since the day of Ghengis Kahn, Attila and countless other leaders of Asiatic hordes, Asia has vainly endeavored to overrun civilized Europe.

Again and again the power of great numbers and ruthless barbarism has come westward from Asia only to beat vainly against the power of European civilization.

The article by William Randolph Hearst reproduced on this page from his daily newspapers points out the danger to civilization, in the present dreadful spectacle that Europe offers to the world, and especially TO ASIA.

It is a gruesome fact, as Mr. Hearst points out, that "Europe is committing hari-kari on the doorstep of Asia."

For centuries that which we call civilization has accumulated knowledge, self-control, power through science.

To-day the wealth, happiness and power accumulated through the centuries is being dissipated in a few hours and days.

All the energy needed to continue civilization's work, to hold Asiatic barbarism at bay, and to build up TRUE civilization is squandered in murder and hatred.

It is too horrible for thought, this fact that the intelligence of Europe, the power, the patriotism, the education, the concentration are all centred upon MURDER and nothing else.

Who wanted war?

Who will profit by it?

What is the aim to be achieved? No man can answer these questions.

The German says that Russia must be held in check and Europe protected from the Slav.

The Englishman says that Germany wants to get England's trade. Germany retorts that England is scheming to get the trade of the whole world.

England says she is fighting because she must stick to her ally, France.

France says she fights because she is attacked and because she must uphold the neutrality of Belgium.

Austria fights because she promised to side with Germany. And Germany fights because she promised to side with Austria.

Can any man TELL WHY THIS WAR IS WAGED?

The murder of Prince Ferdinand was followed by the Austrian attack on Servia. Then came Russian resentment and protest, and Germany's statement that "Servia must take full expiation."

And before the world knew why or how, civilization was cutting the throat of civilization, "committing hari-kari on the doorstep of Asia."

It is easy to read the thought in the mind of the yellow man, "When they get through, it will be my turn."

Asia sees Europe destroying Europe. What then will follow?

It is too soon, apparently, for any hope or talk of peace. The three big nations opposing Germany have entered into an agreement not to make peace separately. This means that Germany must be beaten, or France, England and Russia must ALL THREE be beaten before there can be talk of peace.

How many millions of lives, how many tens of thousands of millions of dollars in property, how many ships, factories, great industries must be destroyed before we see an end of this war that came without real cause, that no man can explain or justify?

The United States looks on in pity and terror and HUMILITY.

Too well we know that we are saved from equal stupidity and desolation, not by superior qualities of our own, but by ISOLATION AND PROTECTING OCEANS. We pray for peace in humbleness of spirit.

Our duty is made clear in Mr. Hearst's article on this page—to work for peace, for real democratic government instead of monarchial government or autocracy.

Repeatedly this country should offer its services as mediator.

Constantly Americans should be on their guard against any violation of neutrality, material or intellectual—for such violation is certain to weaken our usefulness as peacemakers.

We have before us great opportunity, great prosperity, growth undreamed of.

Alone this country, its industrial, financial and government systems stand while others totter.

Alone we keep intact our national treasure, and the greater treasure of national life.

It is not possible to conceive of greater prosperity and power than those now within reach of this country.

But our chief thought should be OF PEACE, not of personal profit.

To restore common sense, government and justice in Europe is the mission of the United States.

To use our influence that Europe may not be put at the mercy of Asia, and this Continent alone left to make civilization's fight, is our pressing duty.

Every citizen should talk peace, think peace and hope for peace.

And thinking and hoping for peace, he should do his best work, assume always the attitude of hope and confidence.

For the beginning of the new era must come here, to appear later in Europe.

This nation must take the lead in the plan to abolish war, stop the destruction of civilization by civilization, and substitute an international police for private armed bands of national banditry.

We suggest again to the citizens a plan repeatedly outlined in this newspaper, and most recently on February 10 last—long before the war was thought of—a plan for an international police to do for the nations what the municipal police do for a city.

The Hearst newspapers said on February 10 last:

The nations need a police force such as individuals have long had.

The nations should combine, as individuals in a city combine, in paying an efficient police CAPABLE OF COMPELLING ALL TO KEEP THE PEACE, powerful to compel the fighters to appear before international impartial courts and receive judgment.

This would be a force paid for by all of the nations—by assessment in proportion to what its size might be. And that force, with its war ships, should forbid colored high jinks in Hayti, half black and half white atrocities in Mexico, and stupid throat splitting generally throughout America.

That same police force, doing for this entire planet what the police do for an individual city, ought to be maintained by all of the nations, and nations, like individuals, should be forbidden the exciting pastime of cutting each other's throats, settling quarrels with cannons and bloodshed.

There is no doubt that we will see such a police some day—and it ought to be soon.

The beginning of a fight in the back alley now is the signal for the blowing of a whistle and the hurrying of policemen to stop the fight.

When the nations shall have organized their squads of police, maintained by all for the peace of all, the beginning of a fight in a back-alley nation will be a signal to the force that demands peace and the fighting will be stopped.

When the lying police of the civilized globe does appear war will not live long.

Hope for the day when an international police will do for the suppression of murderous national impulse what our city police does to-day to suppress the individual murderer and thwart his plans.

Meanwhile, work for peace and observe neutrality in word and in action.

The civilized nations of Europe are destroying each other and the civilization which they have laboriously constructed through centuries. WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Asia sees the chance awaited for centuries. Civilization commits suicide and murders Civilization. And Asia WAITS.

How Leading Men of Affairs Regard America's New Opportunities

The Necessity of Quick Action To Insure For All Time the Commercial Supremacy and Prosperity of the United States Urged by Frank A. Vanderlip, George B. Cortelyou, A. H. Cosden, C. A. Whelan and John Irving Romer.

Ending Our Dependence Upon Foreign-Made Drugs and Chemicals

By A. H. COSDEN.

President Riker-Hegeman Co

THIS country is without honor, save in [illegible] has been proved a [illegible] and ever since the world began. We [illegible] the world over of [illegible] and casting them forth from [illegible] whom the rest of the world [illegible] but that a whole country should [illegible] without sending its own people [illegible] has been reserved for America [illegible] all the ages.

In no sense, there is none more patriotic than the American, in another sense there is none less patriotic. Foreign countries are proud of their resources—and develop them. They are proud of their industries—and they patronize them. America is proud of her resources and no country may boast louder than does this country, but proud of her resources as she may be and boast of them as loud as she may, she has failed in large measure to develop them. She is proud of her industries but she does not patronize them as she should.

To this country, with its almost limitless resources and the magnificent and inordinate energy of its people, not "Ten Talents," but Hundred Talents, have been given. Have we developed them as we should? To this question the great European War gives answer. This war will, I am convinced, serve the great purpose at the least: it is bound to awaken America to a sense of the magnificence of her natural resources and of her boundless possibilities, because it is bound to open her eyes to her almost unbelievable dependence on European countries for many, not only of the luxuries, but of the almost absolute necessities of life.

In no [illegible] is this so true as in that of drugs and chemicals. Blessed with an abundance of natural resources and a variety of climates and [illegible] may be cultivated almost anything that grows, this country has been content [illegible] others experiment and develop the [illegible] producing drugs and chemicals from both the vegetable and mineral kingdoms. This fact is attributable partly to the natural [illegible] of unrest, the disgust- tion and [illegible] ance with anything that is long in development.

It takes knowledge, time, patience and a great number of experiments to perfect the processes of producing chemicals. It is a fact that [illegible] of discoveries of note have been made in the science of medicine within [illegible] ago, when no tests and research work [illegible] were done, things move fast. We want [illegible] to multiply quickly. There are few [illegible] who are willing to lock themselves in a laboratory and work for a [illegible] period to produce that which will be in demand for all time. And that is one [illegible] called causes of our humiliating [illegible] on Europe and the equally humiliating condition that confronts us to-day. We have more Edisons, our almost limitless resources would have been so developed that we would have been little affected by such a war as is raging in the other hemisphere.

We are proud of our industries, but [illegible] remains that we do not patronize them as we should. For some reason, or for a variety of reasons, things that are made in some other country appeal to certain classes of Americans more strongly than goods made in this country do. In many instances, similar articles of just as good value are to be obtained in this country—"Made in America"—at lower prices than are charged for the imported.

We think this attitude is attributable to a variety of reasons. With some it is due to lack of information; they do not know that this country can produce and does produce the thing they want in as excellent quality and as [illegible] other countries do. With [illegible] to be exclusive; this, of [illegible] is more [illegible] than snobbishness [illegible] others the word "imported," for [illegible] has a [illegible] influencing influence. Why [illegible] themselves cannot tell you but in [illegible] they feel that if a thing has [illegible] many thousands of miles across the water to be sold in this country it must be better than anything which is made in America. To such people, whatever is made in America must be better than that is American, until yet they would be angered if it were [illegible] that they were not patriotic Americans. It seems to me that however lamentable the awful tragedy now being played out of the battlefields of Europe may be, we should see in it the day of our opportunity and we should not allow ourselves for any reason to be deterred from grasping it.

As a matter of fact, I cannot see how we can fail to grasp it. In many lines no foreign material is appreciable quantities are likely to enter this country for some years to come. Foreign fields have been devastated, foreign factories destroyed, foreign workers are being slaughtered by the thousands. Many things that are of almost absolute necessity we can no longer obtain from outside, and for a long time after the war is over the exhausted countries will be unable to supply them. Yet we must have them; we cannot do without them. Necessity is not only the mother of invention, but she is also the task-mistress, sometimes apparently stern but yet always beneficent, who drives us to the accomplishment of things; and to-day America, through the pressure of stern necessity, has her opportunity to develop her own resources, to do away with her humiliating dependence on other countries and it is the duty of all true Americans to support this movement by patronizing, not merely tolerantly, but willingly and cheerfully, things that are made in America.

We are going to be forced to take time to stir up our scientific minds, to cultivate our resources, to develop our manufacturing equipments. Regarding drugs, chemicals and other essentials of the drug business, I think we both can and will take steps to cultivate the most essential plants which heretofore have been imported from foreign countries. In this respect the experimental work of the United States Agricultural Department in cultivating such plants and herbs should now prove of inestimable value to the host of new farmers who, I am sure, will take up this work and develop many of our neglected farms. Here is a splendid field of new opportunity for our people.

One of the most essential drugs, shortage of which has already been felt, is citric acid. Its normal price has been from 55 to 60 cents per pound; holders of this article are now asking from $1.25 to $1.50. Citric acid is made from such acidulous fruits as lemons, limes and oranges, and our principal source of supply has been Italy. While these fruits are grown in great abundance in our own West, we have never been able to compete successfully with the foreign product, because the Italian fruits contain a greater percentage of the citrate of lime from which citric acid is made, and also because of our much higher cost of labor. On the latter point I shall not stop to enlarge; but experiments and scientific cultivation by our botanical experts should certainly tend to correct the first defect. Here is another opportunity for our Government to aid in developing the resources of our country.

Olive oil is another essential product, both as a drug and a food. Practically all the olive oil used by us comes from France, Italy and Spain, and this despite the fact that the oil obtained from Californian olives has been proved beyond dispute to be of far superior quality. In Bulletin 77, Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, appears the following statement: "The amount (of olive oil) produced in California is relatively small, although reports warrant the statement that California is capable of supplying the entire home demand." In 1887 Elwood Cooper reported 2,500,000 olive trees in California capable of producing 2,000,000 gallons of oil. The industry, however, has not been developed, largely owing to the fact that in the cheaper grades French and Italian oils can be imported cheaper than the actual cost of production of the California product and a desire on the part of many Americans to buy something that is imported. I want to make very clear the point of the superiority of California olive oil over that of all other countries, and in order to do so will quote from a paper read by L. M. Tolman, of the Bureau of Chemistry, before the American Pharmaceutical Association as far back as 1904: "The most interesting case, however, that has come to our notice is the sending of French oil in bottles labeled 'California Oil,' consigned to San Francisco. This serves to call attention to the fact, not so well as it should be, that the California olive oil producer demands and receives a higher price on the market for his product than the best imported oils bring. This is due to the very high grade of olive oil that of late years has been manufactured in that State."

A fact very little known is that peanut oil, which we can produce in great abundance, possesses all the virtues of the finest olive oil, and so greatly resembles it in appearance taste and odor that only by the most delicate analysis can our chemists distinguish the difference. Professor Sadtler, in an article in the Druggists' Circular, states that peanut oil is used both in France and Germany as salad oil, and no doubt comes to us from Marseilles in considerable quantities under the label of "Virgin Olive Oil." As the chemical composition of the peanut has become better known, attention has been drawn to its food value. It has been found that it is very rich in nitrogenous principles, and a demand has sprung up for such products as peanut meal and grits. It has already been noted as to the European peanut oil that it does not tend to become rancid as easily as olive oil, and this is also equally true of the American oil. The peanut is an abundant American product. Why should not its oil be used in pharmacy where olive oil is now, used?

In a paper read before the American Pharmaceutical Associations, E. H. Gane, commenting on the question of cod liver oil, emphasizes the position that in view of the fact that fish sufficient to supply the markets of the world are annually caught off our coasts, it is somewhat of a reflection upon American manufacturers that we should be still almost wholly dependent on foreign sources for our supply of this product. With a protective tariff in our favor there can be no excuse for such a condition of affairs. It has been pointed out time and again that cod liver oil of quality second to none can be produced in this country, but manufacturers still seem loath to take advantage of their opportunities. Newfoundland is more awake, and has for years turned out a fine grade of medicinal oil, which is at least fully equal to the Norwegian product, if not superior to it. Norway stands out again and again reflecting upon American manufacturers, almost the whole of their surplus product goes to Europe, its annual sales to the United States being a mere trifle, and at the present time the world is looking to that island to supply the deficiency in the Norwegian output.

Menthol is a derivative of the mint family. We are large growers of mint in certain sections of our country, yet our entire supply of menthol comes from Japan. It is said that the Japanese mint is superior to ours, and the low cost of Japanese labor has made it useless for us to attempt its production in our country. The fact remains that we can produce menthol in this country, where there is at least one man who can do what he pleases with the vegetable world, there should be someone who, if the American mint is not equal to the Japanese mint, can "burbank" it and make it at least just as good. As I have said before, I do not think it is within the scope of this article to deal with the question of the cost of labor, but again I say: Here is an opportunity to Americanize America.

The cultivation of camphor trees might not be practical for our immediate needs, but we should not be merely builders for to-day, we should be builders for to-morrow also, and because we have neglected things in the past is no reason why we should go on eternally neglecting them. The Bureau of Plant Industry, in a statement on the subject of American grown camphor, tells us that it has proved hardy over wide areas, that the American grown tree contains sufficient gum and oil to encourage further investigation. Why should we not in time produce all our own camphor from our own grown trees and emancipate ourselves from dependence on other countries?

In the world of synthetic chemicals we are bound hand and foot to foreign countries, especially as regards the group of medicines derived from coal tar, which have been almost entirely developed through the initiative and ability of the German chemists. They have made asclence ofthis particular work, and to such an extent that the entire world is practically dependent on Germany for these indispensable chemicals; and to-day German commerce with this country is entirely no-existent. What a commentary on this country, with its boasted resources and the boasted energy of its people!

Coal tar is abundant in America, and if the present situation does not develop the resourcefulness and initiative of our own chemists, then these qualities do not exist in American chemists. Whether the Germans win or lose, they will certainly lose their supremacy in the chemical field—for a time, at all events. As a single instance, take hydroquinone, a chemical indispensable in photographic work. This can be manufactured anywhere, yet Germany has had a monopoly. Since the war, it is stated, factories have been started in Great Britain and the United States, and in the United States there should be such a development as to free us for all time from dependence on the outside.

I have taken just a half dozen or so of products most commonly used and most widely known as instances showing how we have failed to grasp our opportunities,to develop our resources, to patronize our own industries. Did time and space serve, I could go on and tell you ofa thousand other articles.

Let us feel that this is the day of our opportunity. Let us bend all our energies to the fullest development of our vast resources. In a word, let us use our best endeavors to Americanize America by buying American goods, by patronizing American industries.

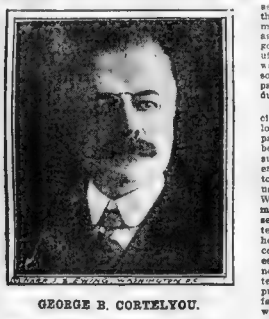
Increased Advertising Important



GEORGE B. CORTELYOU.

By GEORGE B. CORTELYOU.

The First Secretary of Commerce and Labor; Former Postmaster-General; Former Secretary of the Treasury and Now President Consolidated Gas Co., N. Y.

THE immediate effect of the European war is, of course, to disarrange the industries and finances of the entire world, but this country is in a better condition than any other to take advantage of the trade opportunities that will open up as soon as the war is ended. It is reasonable to assume that the belligerent nations will be prostrated, so far as general industrial activity is concerned, as a result of the struggles they have gone through, and it is to us they will look for the means to set the wheels of commerce turning again. In the meantime, while the conflict is going on, our reserves of foodstuffs and manufactured articles will be drawn upon by the warring nations to supply their vital needs, so that while industry in general feels the paralyzing effect of war there are special industries that benefit.

But it is to the other neutral countries, especially those to the south of us, that we must look for the greatest opportunities of trade expansion at the present time. These, having been cut off largely from their usual source of supply, will naturally turn to us as the greatest producing nation not involved in the war, to meet the deficiency. They are looking for us quite as much as we are looking for them. With proper co-operation, our merchants and manufacturers would have little difficulty in securing much of their trade. But the real test will come when the war is over—can we hold the trade in the face of the determined competition that will be sure to come? If established on broad and solid foundations now I believe we can. I believe that the enterprise of our people, if rightly directed and properly supported—with a fair field and no favor—can still hold its own against the world.

So I do not think this is a time for despair, but rather for fresh efforts to push ahead into new fields, as well as for the development of old ones, that we may rise to our opportunities and lay the foundations of an enduring prosperity. Least of all do I think this is a time for the abatement of publicity in trade. On the contrary, indeed, these should be redoubled now, because if advertising increases demand and stimulates production this is the time to advertise; and the merchant or manufacturer who keeps his product prominently before the public now is not only proving his faith in the soundness and strength of American industry, and thus setting a good example to his more timid brother, but is certain to reap an ample reward in the material returns that will come to him.

Strike for the World's Markets

By JOHN IRVING ROMER.

Publisher and Editor of "Printer's Ink."

I HAVE sounded many of America's leading advertisers on the probable effects of the European war on business in this country. There is a significant agreement among many of them that now is the time to strike hard for a part of American trade which hitherto has gone to European houses. American concerns have an opportunity which will probably never come again to establish our goods in practically all neutral countries, where even four years' use of goods of European countries have been strongly entrenched.

The idea of capturing foreign markets is one that may well prove fascinating, but few many American manufacturers can claim to have captured 50 per cent, or even 25 per cent of the wonderful market within our own domain? This war excitement should not be permitted to divert attention from the unprecedented opportunity to cultivate intensively the undeveloped demand unquestionably existing at home.

England is making a strong bid for the American markets formerly supplied by Germany. If the effect of war conditions is simply to change the source of imports, if in future we are to import from England instead of from Germany, we shall gain nothing. Our only chance of gain is to supply our own markets ourselves.

American business is quite competent to take care of itself in the present emergency, but there must be no faltering. Our inherent resourcefulness must be translated into quick action.

England has virtually declared war on German commerce, and, while its armies are facing the German lines on the continent of Europe, those who remain at home are preparing to capture Germany's share of the world's markets.

The English Board of Trade, the Colonial Office and the Chamber of Commerce are cooperating to secure information concerning the amounts and the character of German exports to all parts of the world, and to arrange meetings between English manufacturers and former importers of German goods. The English press is supporting the movement with vigor, and public enthusiasm is aroused at the prospect of sweeping German prestige from the markets of the world.

The accusation has been brought against American business men that they are inclined to rely on the Government for favors, in the form of protective tariffs, subsidies and the like, than upon their own sagacity and initiative. It is said that they will not move until the Government points out the way and insures them against possible loss of profit.

Quick action is necessary if we are to prove the accusation false. England is not disposed to "await developments." She announces her intention of capturing the trade of Germany and Austria at once, and a large part of that trade is with our own home markets. We have long boasted of the speed with which we could adapt ourselves to new conditions. Now is the time to prove it.

Our Whole Commercial Future in the Balance

By FRANK A. VANDERLIP.

President National City Bank.

THE United States can adjust itself to the present economic complications in a successful way, only if individuals fully realize that there must be unselfish, co-operative effort, based upon a broad spirit of international helpfulness. There has been some disposition to feel that the United States can make capital out of the terrible misfortune of European countries; but any conception which contemplates the United States as entirely apart from the world misfortune is fundamentally wrong. The inter-relations now existing between every country of the world in the delicate financial and trade balances which have developed through the interdependence of all nations, makes it inevitable that this country shall suffer in common with the rest. We will not suffer so greatly nor so acutely, though from the humanitarian standpoint, perhaps, our perspective of the awfulness of the war makes us feel it nearly as intensely as those who are participants.

Commercially and economically, we should be able to meet our own problems calmly and with success. And with the restricting of production in the various parts of the world, we should be able to increase our own productions and enter markets which have formerly been supplied by those nations now expending their energies in the conduct of the war.

The Federal Government is co-operating with legislation and executive effort to aid business men to solve internal questions and to expand foreign trade. There is some question as to how the new shipping legislation will work in practical operation, but it is probable, however, that ships will be available to carry our products both to Europe and to South America, if the question of war risk can be satisfactorily taken care of. The next step then is for quick but thorough study of what markets must be supplied and what particular commodities must be manufactured for these countries. People who have information as a result of exhaustive investigation must be willing to put it at the disposal of all who are interested.

In South America, manufacturers cannot a cessfully meet the demands unless they understand fully the peculiar requirements of these countries. There must be no mad, competitive race, no seeking of credit for new enterprises which are not justified by soundly considered prospects for the success of this productive expansion. Each problem, as it arises, in connection with specific markets, should be considered in the view of the soundest commercial and financial judgment. There is practically nothing that this country with its tremendous resources, cannot produce or be able to produce to meet our domestic demands, as well as to assist our world neighbors who have been dependent upon sources which are now cut off. This cannot be done through any enthusiastic generalization upon the possibilities of the United States now becoming the commercial master of the world. It can only be done through wise, definite consistent effort. Shipping problems we have, but they can probably be solved. Credit can be extended to meet legitimate demands, if all those who are in control of the credit situation make sure that the demands are legitimate. Problems which require legislation must be solved through the combined judgment of statesmen and business men. Calmness, caution, conservatism, must be exercised; co-operative effort and united judgment combined with complete analysis of conditions must be employed, if we are to make the radical adjustments that are necessary, and be of the International service which human interest dictates.

Prosperity in Our Hands If We Will Only Grasp It

By C. A. WHELAN.

President United Cigar Stores Co.

OUR business relations with a very large number of the largest manufacturers in this country, whose products may be regarded as household necessities, are of such a character that I believe we are in a position to take the fairest kind of a measure of the opportunities which promise betterment of the times as a result of the European war.

I do not refer here to the goods we buy of cigar, cigarette and tobacco manufacturers and with which we stock our stores. I am speaking of the manufacturers of the goods which we use in connection with our premium department, all articles for which there is a steady demand from all classes, and which take in pretty much of everything that man, women and children want from day to day. These manufacturers with whom I have taken an opportunity to consult during the last ten days or two weeks give me the assurance that they are all feeling a new impetus in their business.

Some of the specific cases they mention are startlingly real evidences that we are approaching a period of improved conditions, due, of course, to already apparent calls for the goods our factories make, or confidence in the belief that the time must soon arrive when the warring peoples of Europe will have to buy what we have to sell them. This foreshadows a prospective demand on our industrial and agricultural resources wholly apart from the new business which will be within our reach through the opening up of new markets like those of South America.

It seems inevitable that there should be a flood of business, and it seems obvious that every American manufacturer should prepare for it. Alone and by itself the business would turn the balance of trade in our favor, whereas it has been going against us. We have in this country been a little slow, and still more complacent, in failing to take account of this very important fact. In other words, we have been worse off than most of us thought.

For one, I am not going to offer any excuses for urging the United States to make the most of the conflict which is drenching the Continent with blood. It is their fight, not ours, and, being in the position to serve the world while we take the profits ourselves, we should let no grass grow under our feet while getting our country to a position of financial and industrial supremacy.

Most important is a concentration of all the forces of American genius and American courage to swing the country into a new era of prosperity. We should look into the future with the eyes of hope, but not with the expectation that hard times will flee at a breath. Be sure, however, that once the fires are lighted under the boilers and once the wheels begin to turn, there will be a stampede to get gather strength every week. No man in business who feels the pinch now should have any other feeling than that redemption lies at hand, and that it can be achieved if we all go forward under the same impulse.

As an immediate factor I have been making a campaign in favor of goods made in America. In my opinion there need be no worker out of work January 1 next if we can get the buying hosts of our population to believe in our own wares. We will have to do without all the imported goods for which we so freely spent our millions, whether we are as patriotic as I think we should be or not. Europe, as a producer, is paralyzed and will remain so even if peace comes, like a miracle, next week. But a national sentiment in favor of our own handiwork, setting aside fashion and fancy, will stir our own artists, our own inventors to endeavors they never dreamed of. We could almost afford to abrogate such free lists in the tariff as would protect for a period of years industries now foreign to us in order to encourage American capital to engage in them.

But whether we go that far or not, we should as Americans create out of the situation, as it is before us, a patriotic sentiment that would make us want to wear the woolens our own looms weave, as earnestly as we want our own yacht to win the America's cup. Let us back Americans who make our soaps and perfumes and brushes and fall hats against the world as gamely as we do our tennis cracks, our golfers, our swimmers or our Marathon runners. "Made in America" should be the best thing any one can say of anything that is bought for money.

What The American has done in starting a campaign along these lines is a fine example of patriotism, and if you will let me say it, farsighted business.

THE PHIL SHERIDAN OF BRITISH ARMY

SIR JOHN FRENCH, WHO BORE BRUNT OF GERMAN ATTACKS, A CAVALRY LEADER

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN

As silent as his chiefs, Lord Roberts and War Secretary Kitchener, but planning and working quietly every hour since he landed on the soil of France, Sir John French, of the group of British commanders, has a part to play in the present war of the Old World which largely resembles, and will more closely resemble as the war goes on, the part borne by General Phil Sheridan in our own great conflict of fifty years ago.

French is the great cavalry leader of the British army. While cavalry has not figured much in the tactics of the last five weeks, it is inevitable that the mighty charges of horses and men be begun soon on a gigantic scale. When the cavalrymen do swing into action as the tremendous armies, now playing for position, draw closer together, the wild stampede of rider and steed will make the very earth itself go trembling.

When that hour comes French will be heard from.

General French made his great record under Roberts and Kitchener in the Boer war. He was locked up in Ladysmith at the time of the siege of Kimberley while a remorseless circle of Boer fighters drew closer in around the city every day. French watched his chance and hiding himself in a car of a Boer relief train, crouching under a seat in which were huddled many refugees, he was not discovered until the train had carried him far beyond the beleaguered city.

Then he made his way to Capetown, where he met Kitchener, who had just arrived from Malta and who was staying in the seaboard town waiting for the arrival of Lord Roberts, his commander-in-chief.

French told Kitchener the state of affairs at Ladysmith and showed him how necessary it was to make a quick and determined movement to relieve the city, where provisions were running low and the garrison, with its many hundreds of women and children, would soon be in dire privation.

Kitchener agreed with French, gave him a force of 8,000 mounted men and told him go back to his job.

French and his cavalry arrived in the nick of time. Had he been forty-eight hours later the city would have been obliged to surrender to save the women and children from famine. As it was, French not only relieved the garrison and its charges, but by his tireless charging, night and day, he struck the first killing blows at the hitherto victorious Boers.

Now the Big Three—Roberts, Kitchener and French—are together again. But the work cut out for them in Europe is of far different pattern from that which came to them in South Africa.

Although he was born in Kent, Sir John French belongs to an old Irish family, that of which the late Lord de Freyne was the chief. He is now sixty-two, two years the junior of his dynamic leader, Lord Kitchener.

French began his career in the navy. Four years of salt water life was enough and he changed over into the army, joining the Nineteenth Hussars. He rose rapidly as a cavalry officer. In the Soudan war he led his regiment of hussars in many brilliant and brave engagements.

He has seen service or been stationed in India and Canada, as well as North and South Africa. His last position, before being ordered to France, was that of commander of the forces in Ireland, with his headquarters in the famous Curragh of Kildare.

Like his two superior French has a job on his hand more weighty and com... he has ever attempted in all his previous military career ... ing the vastly outnumbered ... in the Transvaal was one thing so was chasing the howling dervishes over the deserts of the Soudan; it is quite another proposition to out-manoeuvre ... cut to pieces with his cavalry the serried ranks of Teuton soldiers, who, in every charge will meet his progress with all the steadiness of a granite wall.

It is a curious reflection, as one watches the daily—almost hourly—developments of the war, to recall that only a few months ago Sir John French, because of his foolish, unsoldierly action on the Irish question, came very near losing his commission in the army, which would have robbed him of his present wonderful opportunity and deprived the British Empire of his great services as a military leader in the present tremendous crisis.

In handling that awkward situation in Ireland—a situation without parallel in modern military annals—Premier Asquith displayed wonderful self-control. Mr. Asquith knew then what was soon to come in Europe, and in his heart-to-heart talks with French he undoubtedly told him some things which led to that officer tearing up his letter of resignation.

Like General Sheridan, Sir John French is a short, stout, "stubby"-built man, as he is seen walking on the street in citizen's clothes. But in the saddle he presents an imposing figure, full of life and action, every inch the figure of an alert leader, to whom inaction or "sitting tight" awaiting developments might be a trial unbearable.

When he was on active service ... relief of Ladysmith or the capture of Blomfontein, whenever Lord Roberts, his commander-in-chief, asked a member of his staff "Where is French?" the answer was almost invariably "At the front, with his horse men, leading the line of attack."

The records of the War Office ... London show that French has ... mentioned in dispatches ... front—one of the highest honors a soldier can receive—more frequently than any ... in recent years.

... Mr. (now Lord) Haldane ... me secretary of war, in Mr. Asquith's first cabinet, he conceived a plan for the reconstruction of the British army, using as his pattern the marvelously organized army of Germany. His first move was the creation of a general army council, which was to be a sort of exchange or clearing house of ideas among the officers of Great Britain. For the chief place on that board Mr. Haldane selected General French.

This army council was quickly made by French into a grand High School of Military Candor. Every blunder made during the Boer war was to be manfully acknowledged and faced and corrected. Every one of the false moves which cost England so dearly in that South African chapter of errors was to be fearlessly admitted and explained. There was to be no crying over spilled milk; but no more milk was to be spilled in the future if military common sense and intelligence could prevent it.

The position now held by Sir John French, bearing in person and at the front of the battle line the brunt of the burden of saving the standard of Great Britain in the hour of the great ... recalls an interesting ... of history.

... years ago, or thereabouts, another Irishman, the Duke of Wellington, rising in his ... in the House of Lords to support Daniel O'Connell in his great battle for Catholic emancipation startled his Tory hearers by the solemnity of his words and of his manner, as he reminded them that, if he stood there wearing on his brow laurels of victory as the conqueror of Napoleon, he was enabled to do so, in no small degree, by the valor and the military genius of his officers and men who were of the Irish race.

Sir John French. Hero of Ladysmith, the Roughriding Cavalry Leader, Commander of the British Expeditionary Force Engaged With the Allied Armies in France.

Sir John French's Achievements in France Have Aroused the Enthusiasm of the English People—They Are Cheering Him as They Did When He Helped Defeat the Boers.

PURITANS AND THE APPLE--

By Ex-Governor Curtis Guild

The following address which might properly be entitled, "A History of the Apple," was delivered recently by ex-Governor Curtis Guild before the national convention of Apple Shippers at the Copley Plaza.

Mr. Guild became interested in apple culture while Governor of the Commonwealth. In the last month of his service as Governor he convened a conference of all the Lieutenant-Governors and Governors of New England who were addressed by experts on various objects in which the New England States were interested.

Perhaps some of you from the most distant parts of the country may not be aware that in welcoming you to Massachusetts and to Boston, I am also welcoming you to the birthplace of apple culture in the western hemisphere.

On April 3, 1633, the very rudimentary legislature of the infant colony granted to Governor Winthrop, Conant's Island in Boston Harbor on the express condition that he should plant an orchard of apple trees and a vineyard. The rent of this island was to be one-fifth of its product in wine and apples. The name of the island was at the same time changed from Conant's Island to Governor's Garden. The word "garden" has since been dropped and Governor's Island is the present name.

The rent was subsequently modified to a hogshead of wine and two bushels of apples. The culture of the vine apparently failed, but there are records that the apples were regularly delivered to the "infant legislature," which being tempted like Mother Eve left a dreadful precedent for graft, for the bushels of apples were never distributed to the people, but were consumed by the members of the legislature.

The profusion of grapes growing wild, from which the first settlers in New England named it Vinland gave early evidence of the fitness of New England soil for the raising of fruits. In the colonial period we did raise fruits of the most luscious varieties. The soil is still here, but the native American will not now take the necessary pains in intensive cultivation to make fruit-raising pay.

Some twenty-five years ago, a great political hue and cry was raised in regard to the abandoned farms of Massachusetts. It was declared that a protective tariff was impossible for their abandonment, and that political conditions were responsible for their failure.

Of course this was a pure invention, but it was "a good enough Morgan," as men used to say in the old crusades against freemasonry, for that particular election.

Let me quote a specific instance. One of these abandoned farms. One of these abandoned farms, sold for taxes in the town of Carver, was really deserted because its owner could no longer make a living by raising Indian corn and pumpkins, together with a few ordinary common barnyard fowls.

My old fencing master—who, by the way, had a diploma from the French War Department as the maître d'armes of the chasseurs d'Afrique—bought the farm for the taxes, raising part of the few hundred dollars necessary by a mortgage. Part of the farm was covered by a worn-out apple orchard and part by a swamp. The Frenchman, accustomed to a more thorough method of cultivation, transformed the swamp into a pond and a brook of murmuring water. He raised ducks on the pond and planted watercress in the brook.

The apples the first year were too poor a quality to be sold as apples, but commanded a very ready market as cider. He added coops and substituted for common fowls several choice breeds of poultry. The poultry found a ready sale at high prices.

His profits for the first year paid off the mortgage. By gradually grafting, spraying, enriching of the earth and modern methods, the old apple orchard was speedily improved. The apples were ground, wrapped in paper and packed in boxes, not in barrels. The windfalls and lower grades were used for cider and the best ones sold at high prices in the Boston market.

In short, that farm, which slovenly cultivation and nothing else made unprofitable, was at last accounts supporting three separate French families in comfort, if not in luxury.

The valley of the Taunton River is filled with another thrifty race—the Portuguese—who, coming ... from New Bedford and Cape ... have ... the cultivation of small fruits.

The opportunity for fruit culture ... New England ... as good as ever ... we would but copy the same ... in spraying, in enrichment of the soil, and especially in grading and packing that is shown by the enterprising fruit growers of the Pacific coast.

You have heard how the Puritans brought the apple seeds across the water to New England. Its introduction into the Ohio valley is a pathetic and beautiful story, running back to the days of Daniel Boone. An unfortunate insane man, commonly called Johnny Appleseed, felt it his duty to introduce this fruit. Dressed only in rough sacking he traveled miles barefoot through the wilderness, cared for usually by Indians, who, as always, were merciful and even charitable to one visited by the wrath of God. He carried with him a bag of appleseeds, which he planted freely wherever he went in his wanderings. With the advancement of the frontier and yielding of the red man to the white man, the apple tree advanced with the white race until, at last, the splendid produce of Utah, the Rocky Mountain valleys and the Pacific coast crossed the Pacific Ocean as an American export, as our boys in blue crossed to Asia in the Spanish war, and the apple returned, having circumnavigated the world with the white man, to the same continent that first gave it birth.

Apples and pears are apparently the fruits that have been used for the longest period by man. Relics of both have been found even in the remains of the prehistoric Swiss lake dwellings. ... built, as you remember, on piles set in the midst of the shallow water of the Swiss lakes in times before recorded history.

A glance at the concordance of the Bible shows no mention of the pear, the plum, the peach, the orange, nor, strangely enough, of the date. Apparently the Jews were not acquainted with the staple fruit of their neighbors, the Arabs. There are, however, numerous references to grapes, melons, pomegranates and apples. The apple appears most frequently of all. You will recall, of course, one quotation after another: "Comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love." "Apples of gold and pictures of ... Tread ... fruit or apples ... The ... pear is but one of the ... phrases in which ... adjective is used ... result which has no ... the apple. The Dean ... but was not an apple at ... the fruit of the Other tree, ... appearance of which was exactly as described.

The Romans had two names for apple, "malum," and "pomum." The latter, though most generally used, was also applied to any kind of fruit, making the apple among fruits as THE fruit. There was a goodness of fruit ... will remember, ... The French corruption ... the Latin word into "pomme" ... familiar. I hardly imagine that ... ever ... connect the English word "pomade" with apple. It was, however, so named because ... quity used apple juice ...

The round ball at the extremity of some sword hilts is also called a pommel. The word pommel has its origin in the ... battering a man's ... with a sword-hilt in place of ... edge or point. Pomum, ... naturally has a similar ...

I referred a moment ... to the custom of using the ... apple as a name of other ... fruits. French, "pommes de ..." earth apples, will constantly occur to you. The origin of the English word, "love-apple" for tomatoes, however, may not be as familiar.

The tomato was brought to Europe from Mexico by the Spaniards. The Aztec tongue, in which the fruit is call... tomatl," was very difficult of pronunciation in Spanish mouths. They called it, therefore, sometimes "tomato," but more frequently "apple of the Moor" (de Moro). Now, in Spanish, the word "Moro" means any man who is not white. We have in the English language a similarly insulting name, not used in polite speech, applied not merely to former Southern slaves and native Africans, but Filipinos, Hindus and even Chinese, to express the same idea.

This phrase in Spanish meant the black man's apple. Now, there is no such word as "Moro" in French, but there is such a word as "amour," which naturally has a very different meaning. The French, who received the tomatoes from the Spanish, confused the Spanish word with the French one and called the fruit not "Pomme des Maures," but "Pomme d' Amour," which the English translated into "love-apple."

Edward F. Albee, the progressive representative of the United Booking Office, who has brought to American vaudeville the ideals of the late B. F. Keith, which are best exemplified by the Boston Keith Theatre, is on the trail of the artist who is a paid song plugger for music publishing houses.

Nothing is more offensive than an impudent song plugger, who tries to force worthless songs upon a helpless audience, but the evil has grown until some celebrated vaudeville stars have ceased to search and purchase good exclusive numbers, and now accept a salary from some publishing house to push whatever the manager of the publishing house is endeavoring to popularize.

Mr. Albee has secured an agreement from some of the big publishing houses to cease subsidizing vaudeville artists. "Bob" Larsen, the Boston Keith manager, in discussing the matter, said:

"It is getting to be a frightful nuisance and unfair both to the theatre and the public. Why, some artists who are booked far ahead on their past reputations arrive late in the season, and then offer the public nothing but hackneyed songs that everybody has been singing for months. We shall make them get original stuff or we won't book them."

W. J. Ferguson, the comedian of the Fanny Ward show, is the only survivor of the cast of "Our American Cousin," which was playing in Washington the night that Lincoln was shot by Booth, the actor. Ferguson it was who rang down the curtain when the tragedy occurred. The old actor, whose work in "Madame President" awakens all sorts of enthusiasm, was taking the curtain calls with Miss Ward after the second act last Monday night when an usher appeared with a large bouquet for the star. With the grace of an old school actor, Mr. Ferguson stepped forward to get the bouquet and as he did [illegible] who couldn't see the flowers dropped the curtain. There is a six-inch flap on the bottom of the Tremont Theatre curtain, and this struck Ferguson on the head. It startled him and he slipped forward, and [illegible] the heavy [illegible] curtain [illegible] escaped [illegible] narrow escape. It will be remembered that Vanni Marcoux [illegible] Opera was severely injured last year by a [illegible] curtain.

In a season when theatrical patronage is not as liberal as of yore, it is curious how the attendance at the burlesque houses remains at par. The other evening while watching a performance at the Gaiety with a friend who prides himself upon his [illegible] drama we were both amused by the [illegible] comedy, which is based upon the principle of anything to get a laugh. The love for this [illegible] we inherit from our English ancestors [illegible] Shakespeare was a master at whi[illegible] days burlesque. The author of Hamlet [illegible] knew that the surest way to tickle the [illegible] theatre was to abuse some grotesque character [illegible] at the Merry Wives of Windsor, where everybody take turns beating and punishing fat old [illegible] stuff. Remember "Midsummer Night's Dream" scene with the Ass' head. I could quote [illegible] score of scenes in which old Will Shakespeare [illegible] to slapstick methods, and I am not so [illegible] measure of success is won in modern [illegible] of the Bard of Avon is not largely due to t[illegible] comedy scenes which run through all his plays [illegible] the tragedies.

"Were you [illegible] Newark?" he asks at one point in the play [illegible] know what I have suffered." Will Carleton [illegible] role last done here by George Cohan him[illegible].

It is curious that this play [illegible] is so American and New Yorkish that it should interest any foreigner for a moment, was one of the big hits of last season in London, with Seymour Hicks in the title role.

A most delightful bit of character portrayal is furnished in "The Road to Happiness" at the Wilbur Theatre by that veteran actor, A. L. Evans, who gives such a kindly portrayal of the old farmer Phil. Phil's first entrance in the drama is on the back of a big run down, cornful old horse, and there is only one other scene in the play, where he comes to see the young lawyer, Jim Whitman (played by Will Hodge) in order to get several more "bottils" of spavin cure. Mr. Evans has been upon the stage since 1862. He was then only ten years old. He has thus been a thespian for over half a century. Louisville, Kentucky, was his birthplace, and it was there that he first made his bow before the footlights. He was in the famous cast that supported Mary Anderson when she made her first appearance on any stage at the historic McAuley's Theatre in that Kentucky capital. The bill was "Romeo and Juliet." Mary Anderson has written of this memorable occasion—describing [illegible] naivety of her Juliet. This was 187[illegible] when [illegible] was only fifteen years old. That same year [illegible] West and joined the popular comedian, John Dillon, going clear through to the Pacific Coast. Among the many famous stars whom Mr. Evans has supported in his long and variegated career have been Edwin Forrest, J. Wilkes Booth (the ill-fated brother [illegible] assassin of Abraham Lincoln [illegible] Charles Keane and his wife, Charles Wyndham ([illegible] first visit to America), Edwin Booth, John E. O[illegible] Edwin Adams, Joseph Jefferson, James A. Herne [illegible] Western, Mrs. Scott Siddons, Maggie Mitchell [illegible] and others too numerous to mention.

Plays That Remain

Cort Theatre.

"Peg O' My Heart," second week. This charming comedy is winning its way in Boston just as it did in New York and Chicago. Florence Martin is a brilliant Peg and the remainder of the cast equally effective.

Tremont Theatre.

Fanny Ward, the dashing comedienne, in her great laughing farce, "Madame President," begins her second week at the Tremont. Rarely has a comedy which contains so many laughs been brought to Boston.

Wilbur Theatre.

William Hodge in "The Road to Happiness" appears about to duplicate its great success in Boston with "The Man from Home." The piece has a [illegible] atmosphere which attracts the average theatregoer.

Majestic Theatre.

"Wild Oats," the Porter Emerson Browne [illegible] begins the second week of its engagement at the Majestic. Hyacinth, the horse, and Homer Mason furnish most of the comedy of this unusually laughable comedy of both city and country life.

Shubert Theatre.

"High Jinks" is carrying on something wicked at the Shubert. Stella Mayhew and the big company is putting this musical comedy over in fine style. The third week and audiences increasing all the time.

Plymouth Theatre.

"Along Came Ruth," the Holman Day comedy of Maine folks, headed by Florence Shirley, is appealing by its sweet and wholesome atmosphere. The piece is in its third week.

Colonial Theatre.

"Sari" commences her fourth week at the Colonial. The inimitable comedy of Mizzi Hajos, the humors of Bert Gilbert and the singing of Irene Petrovsky are making the piece one of the hits of the season.

AMUSEMENTS OF AUTUMN SEASON

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

For the grand opening of the regular Fall and Winter season at B. F. Keith's Theatre there has been gathered an unusually attractive bill. All nations are represented. Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne, without question the cleverest exponents of the American rural type of humor in this country, will appear in Mr. Cressy's best and newest playlet, "The Man Who Remembered." With its scene laid in the back office of a New Hampshire general store "The Man Who Remembered" abounds in the comedy and pathos which Will M. Cressy alone can put into his plays. Another big feature will be the Great Pekin Mysteries, a wonderful troupe of Oriental wonder workers and master wizards who have just landed in this country from China. These marvelous magicians offer one of the most amazing and startling productions ever staged in this country. Nellie Nichols, the cleverest of singing comediennes, known as the "Will Someone Name My Nationality" girl, will have a number of new and clever character songs, and another strong comedy feature will be Max's Great Burlesque Circus. This remarkable comedy animal act introduces a complete circus, with dogs, horses, ponies, mules, clowns, wrestlers, and all manner of burlesque feats. Lamberti, the master musician, will offer his startlingly realistic portraits of great music masters, such as Liszt, Joachim, Strauss, Gounod, and other famous composers, and the surrounding bill includes McWilliams, Stendel and Baldwin, Hamilton and Barnes, Johnson and Wells, and Dainty Emily and Incomparable Ajax.

Boston Theatre.

The magnificent [illegible] triumph of Mr. Dustin Farnum in [illegible] a sensational popular [illegible] engagement at the Boston Theatre the past two weeks has induced Manager Leahy to retain him for the coming week. That the standard of [illegible] priced star attractions [illegible] increased from week to week. Mr. Leahy has also secured [illegible] Farnum's brother, William Farnum, and together the brothers will present a mammoth revival of the most stirring of all war plays, "The Littlest Rebel." It was in "The Littlest Rebel" that the two Farnum brothers scored their greatest Boston success at this same theatre two years [illegible]. No play produced in years [illegible] sessed of the human interest [illegible] stirring punch of "The Littlest Rebel." From the rise to the fall of the curtain there is never a dull moment. Dustin Farnum will, of course, play his original role of the Northern army officer. The remaining characters will be entrusted to the members of the permanent company, which has come to be recognized as the finest stock company in America, including Walter Walker, Edna Baker, [illegible] Morison, Joseph Crehan, William Mason, Betty Barnicoat, Florence Tewksbury.

Castle Square.

"How much cash is there—and when do I get it?" was the simple philosophy of Broadway Jones, George Cohan's immortal hero, who pays a visit to Castle Square theatregoers on Monday next.

Money—money—money. How to get it—how to spend it when you have got it—how to come back when it is gone—is the theme of "Broadway Jones." And of course there is a moral at the end.

On Monday Mr. William P. Carleton will play Broadway Jones, and the faithful friend who saves him from the middle-aged widow and [illegible] his thoughts to Jonesville and [illegible] ation will be taken by Dudley [illegible]. The smart little secretary, [illegible] gets him to see that his duty is to [illegible] the paternal footsteps [illegible] and the bun[illegible] dependent on it. The bill for the last half of the week will be headed by the sketch, "When We Grow Up," produced by Roland West and written and staged by Edward Clarke.

SOFT DRINKS OVER BARS LATEST FAD IN BOSTON

Whiskey and Cocktails Give Way to Grape Juice, Ginger Ale and Sarsaparilla

"Squash pie, ping pong, cream puffs and soft drinks 'll soon be the kind of sport you bump into in a barroom," remarked old Colonel Roundup yesterday, sipping a glass of ambient barleycorn juice and mopping his brow with a cotton hanky.

The barkeep at Young's winked at the cigar counter clerk while he mixed a "grapejuice smash" for a gent with a pink band round his hat.

"Taint much like the good old days when you'd be arrested for a Lizzieboy if you said ginger ale to the barkeep. No sirree! them times is passed up already," sniffed the colonel, heaving a sigh as he cleaned out his glass.

To be perfectly devilish without getting "pickled" the fin de siècle caper is to buy your soft drinks in a barroom instead of at the [illegible] fountain.

Boston barkeeps admit that "times is changing." At Young's in addition to a regular mixed or straight, you can now accumulate almost any kind of a common soda fountain jag [illegible] will. Ask the barkeeper at Young's Hotel for a grape smash (grape juice treated with sweetening, etc.), plain grape juice, appollinaris, White Rock, buttermilk, lemonade, lime juice, sasparillia, ginger ale, and he doesn't bat an eyelash.

At Parker's they have the same list for the soft-drinkers with sweet cider added to it, and over at Woodbury's on newspaper row the list laps over into new kinds of "pop" like root beer, claret lemonade, etc.

Buttermilk [illegible] at the bar is now a common standby and rumor has it at the [illegible] places that a lot of the younger ones have passed up onto the water wagon via the buttermilk route.

"The [illegible] crowd is on the increase," [illegible] a noteworthy city Hall [illegible] "artist" yesterday. "We [illegible] new kinds—a lot of this soft fount[illegible] stuff every [illegible] and there's a whole crowd of [illegible] the temper[illegible] goods. You [illegible]"

Farnum Explains Change in Plans

Popularity of Melodrama Means Public Is Tired of Musical Shows.

"Like the child in its early growth the taste of the theatre-going public changes about every seven years," says Dustin Farnum, the star of the Majestic players appearing at the Boston Theatre.

"I do not regard the present popularity of the melodrama as unusual. While it is true that for the past several seasons the country has been swept by a melodramatic wave that will continue for several more seasons, it is only because the great masses of playgoers have tired of the farce, musical comedy or whatever else it might have supplanted. If you go back a little you will find ample proof of my remarks. No better example has been shown than right here in Boston. I have been told that most of plays which invariably have taken well in Boston, have fared but ill.

"Some managers attribute it to the general condition of affairs. But my firm belief is that the people have tired for a while of the musical [illegible] After all the people seek the theatre to be entertained. Therefore why not give them what they want. When I say this, however, I do not intend to disregard the moral or educational feature of a play, which may prove a purpose of the author."

Plays to Be Seen at Boston Theatres

A new play will be produced by Arthur Hammerstein at the Majestic Theatre on Thursday evening, September 24, entitled "The Trap," written by Richard Harding Davis and Jules Eckert Goodman. The cast is a very promising one, including such well known players as Janet Beecher, Charles Richman, Tully Marshall, Orrin Johnson, Ralph Delmore, George Harcourt and Elaine Hammerstein. Mr. Hammerstein is presenting "High Jinks" at the Shubert Theatre and has produced a number of notably successful light musical pieces, among them being "The Firefly," but this is understood to be his first venture in the drama.

Provincetown Trips.

But little more than one week remains of the season of delightful deep-sea trips to Provincetown, as the present season terminates on Monday, September 21. The great popularity of this line was attested all season by the enormous crowds that took this trip, and on Sundays and holidays the management was compelled to turn many away.

Bass Point.

The season of delightful harbor trips from Otis wharf, Atlantic avenue, to Bass Point and Nahant closes today, after one of the most successful seasons in its history. Trips will be made hourly all day today, and at Bass Point the hotels will offer many specialities in musical programs.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

By Arrangement with the Eclectic Film Co.

Sanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline love each other, but she wants two years of thrilling experiences seeing life before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr Marvin asks to see what she has written while Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell sees the half exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his nerveless grasp while he whisper a strange message from the remote past.

Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life, and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription blank a brief will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage. Hicks, a race-track man, and Owen, conspire to kill Pauline.

Lois is another villainous character. Balthazar, the gypsy chief, allies himself with Owen. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish Pauline's end.

"BUT it is not fair, Master, to blame us for our caution," said the Gypsy Balthazar

"You mean great, you mean," snapped the secretary. "At any time in three years we could have got rid of her. A dozen places you could have killed it all."

The secretary and his strange ally were to meet at the wood gate outside Castle Ruin. Balthazar apologetic but powerful in spite of Owen's black schemes; Owen wrathful, but afraid to say too much. The argument was brief.

"We were too near the McCallan bungalow. To kill her there would have been to ourselves—perhaps to kill you in the end, Master."

Balthazar's voice was the voice of a strong man, but his subtle insinuation worked upon the mind of the secretary. "I think you are only after the money."

Owen sneered.

"What are you after, Master?"

"I am trying to do away with a young woman, in order that I may devote a great estate to the service of humanity; in order that it may not be frittered away by a frivolous young man and woman."

"Then you have decided to end the young woman also?"

"We shall never be rid of Pauline until we are rid of Harry."

"That is true," declared the gypsy. "He is aided by the devil. But I have a plan, Master."

"And a price?"

"What? We must live—to kill."

Owen shrugged impatiently. "What is it another pleasant and expensive excursion to the Adirondacks for you and your friends?"

"No; it can be done within six miles of his spot. Will you come with me?"

"Where?"

"No further than Braithville, where Marvin has his factory."

"Do you think that you can walk into his office and shoot him down?"

"No, Master. I will show you my plan, if you will go with me."

"Walk down the road then. I will pick you up with my machine. But be careful. This devil, as you call him, is suspicious. Keep me if any one is near."

"I will be watchful, Master."

Twenty minutes later, Owen, at the wheel of his own special car, stopped on the high road to offer a cheery "lift" to a plodding, dusky-skinned gypsy, who seemed exhausted by the journey. The gypsy accepted the invitation with obsequious surprise, and on the little trip to Braithville he and his rich benefactor held intimate conversation.

"What is the plan?" I don't seem to remember it," said Owen.

"No, indeed. The town has grown away from it—around the new factories. The old building is half a mile from any road. No one goes near it."

"Good! But about the fire. I don't like that idea."

"The fire will be nothing," said Balthazar with a toss of his hands. "I will see that there is little damage. All that is necessary is to get him excited enough to be off his guard and near enough to the old building to seize him without being seen. Here we are now. Take that side road, Master. The trees will hide the car."

Owen swerved the machine into what looked more like a thicket than a road. It was overgrown with giant weeds and grasses, but the heavy wheels of the automobile crushed through the frail impediment. In three minutes they had wrecked fifteen years of nature's retrieval.

They drew up within sight of a brick ruin—a building that once had been the pride of Braithville when the first Marvin opened his first factory.

Now it lay, tomb-like, in its overgrowth of vines. Had one not known that the great new Marvin factory, born of this relic, lay only half a mile to the westward, one would have felt a sense of gloom in viewing this ruined mausoleum of industry.

With Balthazar leading, they pushed their way through weed and briar to the door of the dilapidated structure.

"You don't want to go inside, do you?" asked Owen nervously. "That chimney looks as if it would fall if a fly brushed it."

"I have been in—only yesterday. It is perfectly safe," said Balthazar. "The chimney is very interesting—to us."

"What do you mean?"

Without answering the gypsy moved through a crumbling doorway, strewn with fallen bricks, into a wide room that had once been the main workroom of the factory.

Owen followed hesitantly.

The room had no roof. Its covering had caved in years ago, and the feet of the invaders of its ruins now crunched on masses of fallen brick and board and glass. It would have been gloomy had not the afternoon sun shone gently down upon them amid the wreckage.

From the inner wall of the old workroom towered still the chimney that once had smoked and sparked prosperity over the new born town of Braithville—the town that had now deserted its parentage and moved unloyally away. The chimney was about twelve feet wide at its base, and in spite of vents and holes in its brick sides, still towered forty feet above the ground. Balthazar led Owen toward the base of the chimney. He pointed meaningly to an orifice about two feet square in the side of it.

Owen looked through the hole and looked down.

"Where does it lead to?" he asked.

Even Owen shuddered.

The black pit into which he gazed was perhaps twelve by four feet in dimensions and about five feet below the ground level of the building. From it came the smell of the must of years. Damp, fetid grime and mosses walled it. Owen drew back quickly.

"Yes," he said, "there couldn't be a better place. But—we don't need to stay here any longer. Who is to do the work?"

"I have a friend of the name of Ravelli," answered Balthazar. "He was trained to lay bricks before he taught himself to lay—plans. He is a man of wisdom and of caution."

"Master, he will take any risks—but it will cost."

"Again?"

"We are risking our lives to kill for you, Master."

"I will pay you as soon as he is caught—not before."

"That is reasonable. He will be easily captured."

"When?"

"This afternoon, if you think best."

"The sooner the better. Come back to the machine. This place is unwholesome."

"Do you not approve my plans, Master?"

"Where are the tools?"

"Ravelli will carry them with him."

"Who is this Ravelli?"

Balthazar leaned forward and whispered his answer.

"He is a safe man. He was an airman—what do you say?—an aviator for the Austrians; but he was dismissed."

"For what?"

"For nothing. Merely for telling an officer of the French the plans of a fortress."

Even the dark face of Owen lightened with a smile. "So you are a humorist as well as a scholar, Balthazar?" he said.

The gypsy beamed blackly. "Shall I take you to see Ravelli?" he asked.

"Yes," said Owen.

They went back to the car. They drove into the city. Swinging up Broadway, the machine swung softly into Sixteenth street and stopped.

Owen called to a policeman on the corner. "Can you let me leave my car here for about a half hour?" he asked.

The $10 bill gleaming golden from his opened purse settled the question. He and Balthazar walked to the east briskly.

At Second avenue Balthazar directed their course uptown for a block and then turned into Seventeenth street.

"It is here," he said, as he stopped before the commonplace, glass panelled door of a tenement. They walked up four flights of stairs and the gypsy rapped gently upon a door.

To Owen's surprise, when the door was opened, he found himself not in a secluded small apartment, but in a narrow passageway, which, from the light flashed through the briefly opened entrance, seemed to extend a hundred feet ahead of them.

The door was closed silently and they were in utter darkness. Owen did not see who opened or who closed the door. Balthazar drew an electric flashlight from his pocket and guided the way along the corridor. The sound of voices came to them distantly. Balthazar rapped at another portal, and they were admitted into an immense room—a room stiflingly hot, reeking with the scents of bad liquor and bad tobacco.

There were perhaps twenty men in the room. They were playing at cards, at dice. A billard table, its cover torn beyond hope, was the seat of the dice game. They surged about it, calling upon their luck in prayerful blasphemy.

A man with a black mustache and sunken brow sat alone at a table sipping whiskey and water. He sprang to his feet when he saw Balthazar. As they shook hands, the other men turned and resumed their play. Owen's distinguished appearance in the liar of crime beckoned much to them, but in their code, curiosity was a sin deeper than murder.

Balthazar introduced Owen to the man with the black mustache. "This is Ravelli," he said.

"The bricklayer?" said Owen.

"The aviator," flashed Ravelli.

"I beg your pardon." Owen surrendered. "Balthazar will explain my mistake."

Balthazar explained, but not in the hearing of the men in the room—not even in the hearing of Owen. He drew Ravelli apart and explained the mission in whispers.

Owen had seated himself, a little doubtfully, at one of the tables. As the men returned to him, he asked: "Is it settled?"

"Yes—except—you understand, Master."

"Yes," said Owen. "But this is the simplest of work. Here is $500 for both of you. If you are successful—completely successful—I will double it. If not, this is absolutely all that you will receive."

For a moment Balthazar eyed Ravelli questioningly. If the disgraced aeronaut had shown the faintest flash of protest, the price would have been instantly increased. But the small sum was a dazzling reward to the disgraced airman. His eyes were fastened on the bills in Owen's hands.

There was a sudden cessation of the clamor around the dice table as the bills were counted out. But Owen, having divided them equally, raised his head and asked:

"Is that enough, or shall I go to others?"

"That is enough for me," said Ravelli, in an eager voice.

"I will accept it," said Balthazar, "but there is a great risk for us, Master."

Owen's face fell into a sneering smile. "The risk, Balthazar," he said, "is probably mainly mine."

"It is agreed, Master."

Balthazar guided the secretary down the black hall and they parted at the door.

"Thus did we seek the old things;
Thus did we seek and hear,
Of wild deeds, unrepented,
In the haunts of the buccaneer;
Fashioning forth our music
Where the palm trees lift and sway
By the sands of old Port Royal,
Or beside Sanana Bay."

"Isn't it beautiful? Isn't it splendid?" cried Pauline, running into the after-breakfast and somewhat unpoetic presence of Harry in the library, and reading as she ran.

"So I have to go into poetry as well as perils," said Harry, laying down his newspaper.

"You do," said Pauline. "It's just the wildest and most beautiful thing I ever read. It's called 'The Rover Bards.' Listen to this:

"Down through the wondrous islands,
In deathless Springtime clad—
Cuba, Hispaniola,
Jamaica and Trinidad"——

"Nice names," said Harry. "but I have taken up the adventure department of this family."

"You"

"Yes. I bought an aeroplane yesterday. I couldn't see why you should be the only tempter of fate—the exclusive heroine—around here."

"Harry! Did you really?"

"I'll take you out and show it to you."

"And fly with me"

"Only to the altar—never to the skies. Remember THIS is My aeroplane."

Arm in arm they went out into the garden and down to the open tract beyond. An aviator, helmeted and leathined, was swearing cordially at a mechanic who was fixing the engine of a large machine.

"Isn't she a beauty?" demanded Harry of Pauline. "Her greatest speed is three miles an hour, and she has been up more than 150 feet from the ground."

The aviator looked at Harry in questioning rebuke. "I've had her up 5,000 feet myself," he said defiantly, "and put her a mile a minute against a wind."

Harry laughed.

"May we go up now?" asked Pauline.

"No," said Harry. "I have just told you that it is MY machine."

"Well, I will take one like it," she said, turning to the aviator. "Where my brother goeth, I shall go."

They were interrupted by Raymond Owen, who came leisurely through the bush-rim of the field.

"Do not use this aeroplane, Owen," said Pauline. "It is extremely exclusive. Wait until I get mine."

Owen was puzzled. The aeroplane did not form any part of his present plans. Besides, he was a little nervous, for behind the bushes from which he had just emerged he knew that Balthazar and Ravelli lay hiding. He had brought them there in the hope of a capture, but the presence of the aviators had foiled them.

However, he managed a cheery answer and followed Harry and Pauline to the house.

Ravelli went through the bushes and joined the aviators. Balthazar followed him.

"That's a great machine—a wonder," said Ravelli.

"You bet it is," said the airman. "But who let you in."

"I used to run one myself," said the disgraced soldier, ignoring the inquiry and moving, as if fascinated, around the machine.

"Come along," commanded Balthazar. And reluctantly Ravelli followed him across the grounds to the wood gate and out into the road.

Harry and Pauline were in the library when the telephone bell rang, about three hours later. As Harry answered the call, his face suddenly blanched. He shot sharp hurried questions over the wire, and, snapping down the receiver, turned with a look of dismay to Pauline.

"What is it—what has happened?" she cried. It was seldom that Harry showed alarm.

"The factory at Braithville is on fire," he called back to her as he was running to the door.

She flew after him to the garage. "I'm coming, too," she cried.

He looked his protest, but there was no time for parley. He helped her to the seat of the racing machine, and they shot down the drive.

Owen stood gazing after them with a look of almost pitying triumph. He was called back to the library by the renewed ringing of the telephone bell.

"Master, we have gone too far. The fire is spreading to the houses, and the wind sweeps it on. The firemen are helpless"

"What does that matter?" questioned Owen, coldly. "They are on their way to you. Do as we arranged to do."

"But the fire will wipe out the town, Master"

"What is the town to me? Have your men got their firemen's clothing?"

"Yes, Master. Shall we help to save the factory?"

"Let it burn. If you do the work I paid you to do, I can spare a factory."

It was on a hilltop ten miles from burning Braithville that Harry and Pauline in their speeding car first saw the smoke-shroud with its lurid lining that marked a city's doom.

"It's the whole town going," said Harry in a choked voice.

Pauline shuddered and gazed, fascinated, at the far-flung battlements of flame. They sped on.

As they drew nearer the smell of hot smoke reached them, and they could hear the roar of the wind-driven flames. On the hill descending to the town they could see house after house burst into flame; and, now, flocking like driven beasts along the road, came the first refugees—men, women and children, carrying their small belongings, weeping, shouting and afraid.

At the verge of the town a company of firemen that had evidently hurried from a nearby village without apparatus, ran from a side road as Harry's car approached.

"Mr. Marvin," called one of the men, dashing to the side of the machine, "our Chief has asked if he can see you. There is a chance of saving part of the town by using dynamite."

Harry stopped the car and jumped out.

"You had better wait here," he said to Pauline.

"No; I'm coming with you," she declared. "This way" said the man. His companions followed, and he and Harry and Pauline moved up the side road.

Another man in a fireman's uniform came running to meet them. As he reached Harry he struck him a blow in the face, knocking him into the arms of his followers. Two men seized Pauline. In the din of the fleeing people on the main road and the roar of the fire, their cries were unheeded.

"Gag them first," said Balthazar, taking off his fireman's helmet. "Then back to the automobile."

Can It Be True There Are Girls Who Prefer Cigarettes to Candy?

A five-pound box of chocolates at $1 per pound or a bunch of American beauty roses at $12 a dozen is not the way to win the girl you are courting—that is, if you are an up-to-snuff lovemaker of the ultra-fashionable young women of today, according to various seaside beaux who are drifting back to town.

The candy-bouquet path to love has gone completely out of date among modern "smart set" girls, and in its stead has arrived the gold-tipped-violet-scented-cigarette method of luring Cupid.

Wooers who come with a little package of these fetching, fascinatingly wicked little "tacks" in their pocket are now the welcomed ones at Nahant and all along the North Shore, where the smartest debutantes of the Four Hundred are winding up the season. The real pastime for indoors, a sort of rainy-day or evening-by-the-fireside recreation is inhaling and exhaling the violet cigarette.

It's woe to the chap who comes, fishing out a box of chocolates instead of the violet cigarettes. He gets a cold welcome—that is among the girls who feel that way about it.

October Wedding Bells to Ring Merrily Among the Newton Set

October this year will be as much of a bride's month as last June was among the Newton contingent of the fashionable set. The wedding bells begin to ring on the twenty-sixth for the marriage of Miss Katherine Sinclair Weeks and John Washington Davidge. Miss Weeks is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Weeks of No. 97 Valentine street, West Newton.

Other prominent weddings following in quick succession are Miss Lucy Robbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Robbins of No. 212 Chestnut street, West Newton, who is to marry William Rand, so famous in the Harvard athletic world.

Miss Rosamond Capen will be an October bride and will live in New York, where Oliver Andrews, her fiance has his business interests.

Mr. and Mrs. George King have cards out for the marriage reception of their daughter, Ruth, and John S. Henderson, Jr., on Saturday, October 10, at eight in the evening at the King home, No. 272 Lake street, Newton Highlands. Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, after a honeymoon spent in the South and visiting relatives of Mr. Henderson in the Carolinas, will live in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Miss Rachel Whidden, daughter of Stephen H. Whidden of West Newton, will marry Roy Merchant in October.

Miss Margaret Tapley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Tapley of Newtonville, is to marry Henry Dasset Whitcomb of Dartmouth '09.

The wedding of Miss Evelyn Gorton of West Newton and Walter Homes Cady of Brookline, which is to take place on the 17th of October, will be an event of widespread interest. Both Miss Gorton and Mr. Cady are outdoor enthusiasts of unusual distinction, and especially in golf Mr. Cady's prominence is broadly accepted. The ceremony will be held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gorton of Berkeley street, West Newton, with relatives and close friends of the bride and groom in attendance and a large reception following immediately. The new home of Mr. and Mrs. Cady will be in Newtonville, Mass.

Al Fresco Wedding and Lawn Breakfast for Miss Edith Lawrence Reed

One of the largest and smartest weddings of the current month is that of Miss Edith Lawrence Reed, a charming daughter of Mrs. Charles Reed of New York, and young "Dick" Townsend of Brookline.

The ceremony is scheduled for the last Tuesday in the month at the Reed country home, "Fairfield Farm," in Great Barrington, where there is a large colony of Bostonians among the Summer residents.

I hear from the best of authority that Miss Reed, who is so well known here socially, is to entertain extensively next season here, where, with her young husband, they are to make their home in Brookline, near where Mr. Townsend lives now on Hawthorn road.

Rev. Joseph R. Lynes of St. James' Episcopal Church in Great Barrington is to officiate, while Miss Helen Hyde of Plainfield, N. J., who is the house guest of the bride-elect at present, is to be among the bridesmaids, as well as Mr. Townsend's sister, Miss Katherine Townsend. A number of Boston people are planning to attend the affair, which will be largely al fresco, and, being solemnized at half-past one o'clock, will afford every opportunity for a large breakfast which, I understand from the best of authority, is to be served at numerous small tables on the superb lawn of the Reed estate.

Miss Reed and Mr. Townsend were the guests of honor at a large dinner in honor of the coming nuptials on Sunday evening, when Mrs. Reed was among the guests.

Cupid Claims Another Radcliffe Girl; She's the Bride of an Educator

At St. John's Chapel, Cambridge, Miss Irene Morton Floyd, Radcliffe '11, a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Floyd of Kenwood street, Brookline, became the bride of Professor Alexander Ward Miller of Youngstown, O., Harvard '12, and sub-master of the Marblehead High School. The Rev. H. W. Dyer of Somerville officiated.

The bride, when at Radcliffe, was an Idler Club member and was affiliated with the Dramatic Club, leader of the college choir and captained the college '11 track and basketball teams.

Her college friends, Misses Elizabeth Spencer, Waltham; Hilda Vaughn and Clara Coyle, Providence; Jessie Smith, Boston, and Eleanor Brown, Cambridge, were in her wedding party.

Donald J. Lynn, Harvard '13, served Professor Miller as best man. His corps of ushers were Ralph Harrington of Tufts College, Dr. Dwight Robinson, Ralph Cochran and Herman Cochran, all of Harvard '13.

A reception at the Floyd residence followed the ceremony.

Professor and Mrs. Miller will live at Marblehead.

North Shore Society to Be at Park-Hyde Wedding

At St. Andrew's Dune Church, Southampton, L. I., Saturday, September 19, Miss Dorothy Hyde and Darragh A. Park will be married.

Mr. Park will have several well-known Boston and North Shore young benedicts to usher at his wedding, namely, H. Pratt McKean, George von L. Meyer, Jr., Walter Tufts and Carleton Burr, also Charles H. Davis, Erskine Wood, Humphrey Parsons, Thomas Frothingham, Griswold Webb, Lewis Park and H. Godfrey Hyde. James Park will serve his brother as best man.

The bride-elect's attendants will be Edith Mortimer and Miss Elsie Park.

Colors of the Autumn At Miss Lee's Wedding

Miss Florence Lee of Brookline, whose wedding to young Francis Sargent is to be quite the social event of the current month, is to carry out the color scheme in accordance with the autumnal season. The bridesmaids are to wear changeable yellow and gold taffeta silk gowns with long [illegible] shaded yellow and green chiffon, while their hats are to be [illegible] of cream straw, or leghorn, trimmed in the shaded red, yellow and [illegible] of the autumnal coloring, and will, I understand, carry large sheaves of goldenrod.

COHASSET GIRL TO WED SALEM MAN

MISS MARY NICKERSON, OF SMITH '12, ENGAGED TO E. H. OSGOOD, HARVARD '05

Wedding of unusual interest owing to the social prominence of bride and groom-to-be.

Among the interesting South Shore Summer colony engagements announced recently is that of Miss Child Nickerson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nickerson of Cohasset, to Edward Holyoke Osgood of Salem. The match has attracted more than the ordinary attention from the social prominence of both the bride-to-be and Mr. Osgood. Miss Nickerson graduated from Smith College two years ago with the class of 1912 and was one of the popular girls at the Northampton college. Mr. Osgood was a member of the Harvard class of 1905.

Many Weddings of Early Autumn Are Interesting Society

A South Shore wedding, which took place Thursday evening, was that solemnized at Hingham. The contracting parties were Miss Ruth M. Kimball, daughter of the George E. Kimballs of Pleasant street, and Carl C. Jones of Waterville, Me.

A wedding of Hyde Park interest, solemnized Wednesday evening, was that of Miss Polly B. Lesseur, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lesseur of Fairmount av., and Dr. Percy W. Carr, prominent in Hyde Park's medical circles. The Rev. Perley B. Davis of West Roxbury, pastor of the Hyde Park Congregational Church officiated. A reception followed from 8 to 10 o'clock. The bride's parents were married in the same house and by the same clergyman.

Tuesday morning at "Pine Lea," Shirley, Mrs. Grace Winslow's residence, in the presence of immediate relatives and friends, Miss Allison Winslow became the bride of George Hitchcock. Miss Helen M. Winslow, the well known club-woman and author, gave the bride away. The Rev. Charles Gray of Newton officiated. The bride's only attendant was Eleanor Loudcy of Shirley. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock will make their future home in Elmira, N. Y.

The wedding Saturday at "Constitution Hill," Princeton, N. J., of Miss Sarah Morgan and Henry Burchell Gardner was of interest to Harvard College and Boston society. The bride is a cousin of Junius Spencer Morgan, fiance of Miss Louise Converse of Boston. Mr. Gardner is the son of Mrs. Alfred Wild Gardner of New York and New London. He is a Harvard '12 man and a classmate of George Von L. Meyer, Jr., and S. M. Felton, 3rd., young benedicts of last season.

At Trinity Episcopal Church, Lenox, yesterday noon Miss Mary Mildred Turmure and Roger Wolcott Griswold of Erie, Pa., were united in marriage. The bride's sister, Miss Irene Turmure, served as maid of honor. The bridesmaids were the Misses Katherine L. Lawrence, Anna R. Alexandre, Helen Turmuil and Anna O. Delafield. The flower girls were Ursula W. and Adela Griswold. Eli Griswold of Erie was best man. The ushers were John Sloane, George E. Turmure, Jr., William E. S. Griswold and George Taylor of Erie.

Wednesday evening at the E. T. Carver residence in Cambridge, Miss Alice Beatrice Carver became the bride of George Newcomb of Somerville. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Dr. M. Paddock of St. James' Church. Mr. and Mrs. Newcomb will reside in Maplewood.

Observations of the Smart Set Made During Week by the Dowager

BY THE DOWAGER.

Mrs. C. P. Hemenway of Boston and Smith's Point, Manchester, is the charming type of elderly dowager who is meeting the advancing years with matronly dignity and conventionality.

Mrs. Hemenway has never had the desire to set aside her handsome span of horses, her baroushe and liveried coachman for an automobile. To her social traditions, as a prominent matron both of the old and new social regimes of Boston and the North Shore, she clings to what has always appealed to her.

I saw Mrs. Hemenway at the Manchester depot recently bidding adieu to some friends. She had left her carriage and had come near the outgoing train to make her farewells at close range. She wore a black tulle gown fashioned over white. Her wrap was black and her bonnet of black and jet with a white fluffy feather aigrette. Her hair was dressed low with two small gray curls falling from each side of the low coiffure.

These beautiful September days have caused Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes to find pleasure and exercise in a brisk walk to W[illegible] must the Justice on [illegible] Beach. [illegible] his recent strolls along West street to the beach on other day. His firm bearing and alert step, his distinction as the famous poet's son made all turn and regard him with interest. His distinguished father is remembered with veneration by the older residents of Beverly Farms and all delight to tell of some pleasant incident between them and the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table."

I have seldom seen Mrs. George G. Crocker of Commonwealth avenue looking smarter than she did the other morning in the South Station with her youngest daughter. They both had just come up from a short visit with friends who had had a large house-party at Marion. Mrs. Crocker, who has an especially stylish figure, was attired attractively in a creation of dark lavender taffeta silk, the skirt of which had the inevitable tunic which reached nearly to her knees and was gracefully full at the waist-line at the front. The skirt had absolutely no trimming and the short coat worn with it was in the bolero effect and had a narrow collar of pastel shades of silk embroidery in the dull yellows and browns, while over it was a full ruffled collar of a deep shade of heavy cream lace.

This same effect in the trimming was carried out on the cuffs, which were very deep, reaching nearly to the elbows, as well as on the wide revers, the lace being shirred in full effect on the latter and forming a narrow vest, where the coat was fastened with large buttons of the taffeta. Her hat was a small English walking shape of the deep lavender shade of dressed straw and the simple but stylish trimming was in the tiny pale blue and lavender wings, the color scheme being an alternate one in the two colors which formed the band around the low crown. Long white suede gloves with an embroidered lace veil in the mode shade completed a very chic costume.

Mr. and Mrs. Roger Noble Burnham are to occupy their city home, situated so near the former Toy Theatre on Lime street, Boston, for the greater part of the Fall, as Mr. Burnham has his studio there.

For that reason they are loth to leave the vicinity where they were located last season until their house adjoining the botanical gardens in Cambridge is ready for occupancy. Mr. Burnham is among the most prominent members of the Toy Theatre company and will be seen this Winter in a number of their productions at the new theatre now building on Dartmouth street, in which Mrs. Lyman W. Gale is among the prime movers.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnham, who are occupying their beautiful studio at Magnolia in the Library building for the sixth season, will be greatly missed there next Summer, as they are to spend the Summer travelling extensively when not in their new quarters in the University City.

I heard of a delightful supper party given Mr. and Mrs. Burnham the other evening at the "Old Barn Studio" of Miss Eleanor Weare Pearsen in East Gloucester. Mrs. Burnham looked especially well in a creation of taupe crepe de chine, the bodice of which was almost entirely of cream lace and insertion. The trained skirt had the braiding of the same shade of taupe silk trimming it. The short coat of the crepe was done in the braiding, while at the throat was a most artistic bit of pale blue crepe in the way of a long tie and ends.

Her hat was a small low-crowned black dressed straw turban trimmed in the large bows and ends of black taffeta ribbon and worn with a black lace embroidered veil. The wrap worn with this gown was especially pretty in the way of a white heavy canvas cloth which reached to the hem of her gown and had the large white satin buttons edged with bands of black satin. The cape of the wrap was a deep one of black satin which fell very nearly to the waist line.

Seldom one sees a large woman look so well in black and white on all occasions, but such is the case with Mrs. Alexander Steinert of Commonwealth avenue. I refer to a white creation of ratine which she wears a great deal in motoring on the North Shore, where with her husband and sons she is entertaining a great deal this Summer at their beautiful place at Beverly Farms. The gown is very plain save for the quantity of heavy white linen lace which trims it, and with this she wears a stunning large picture hat of straw, which is trimmed in the huge shaded pin and red roses and their foliage. A long wrap of white linen adds tremendously to this chic costume, as it has the wide white satin cuffs and also the deep cuffs are of the same material.

Among the well known people just back from their Summer's outing is the Baroness Rose Posse. The baroness has been spending a great deal of time in the far West, where she spoke at several educational schools in St. Paul and other large cities.

She was looking especially smart the other afternoon when I happened to meet her at a large reception wearing a stunning gown of dark blue crepe de chine. The trimming of this was of stunning linen lace and insertion, while the bands on the skirt were in the pastel shades of silk embroidery. The waist had much cream lace on it, while the wide revers of the short stylish coat were of the same coloring. Her hat was a large one of navy blue dressed straw, trimmed in the shaded red and pink roses and quantities of the green foliage.

Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, Jr. (Miss Elizabeth Lee of Brookline), has been in New York for a visit to Southampton, L. I., for a few days. Mr. McKean went on to attend the bachelor dinner which young Darragh Park gave at the Meadowbrook Hunt Club last Saturday night in honor of his approaching marriage. Mrs. McKean, I understand, was greatly admired at a dinner given at the St. Regis the early part of the week by her father-in-law, H. P. McKean of Philadelphia, to meet his new fiances, Miss Margaret Riker of New York, to whom his engagement has just been announced. Miss Riker was very striking in a gown of dark blue crepe de chine, the bodice of which was done in the pastel shaded embroidery of silk. Her hat was a small one of black straw, trimmed in pink roses and their foliage.

Mrs. Edward J. Holmes was looking exceptionally attractive the other day when noticed en route to Manchester, with Mr. Holmes, on the North Shore train. Her costume was of heavy green moire. The short blouse coat was worn over a filmy white waist. There was a high plaited ruche collar of black and white worn with the coat. Mrs. Holmes' chapeau seemed to fit in, too, with the crispy autumn air. It was of close black straw. Red roses with a touch of green were banked heavily at one side. For height there was a wired coronet of flimy black lace. A black face veil with scattered coin dots was also worn. The entire costume was very smart and becoming.

Mlle. Les Pleon, prima donna of the State Opera, Paris, says: "Savon Cadum has given me most excellent results."

Many women conceal their real beauty behind a coating of cosmetics, powders, creams and lotions, covering their faces with an air-tight coat that clogs the pores and prevents the natural discharge of impurities that lodge in the pores of the skin. The beauty of the skin depends upon a healthy activity of the pores, which must be kept clean so as to enable them to throw off impurities. For this purpose nothing is so good as Savon Cadum, the famous French Complexion soap At dept. and drug stores, 50c.

Myopia Hunt Club Is Host to Thousands at Its Annual Horse Show

The Myopia Hunt Club threw open its extensive grounds to the people from far and wide on Labor day and gave its twentieth annual program of horse show sports for the entertainment of thousands of people.

The day was ideal for outdoor enjoyment. Hamilton was en fete. Special trains, automobiles, country vehicles, motor cycles and trolleys brought throngs of sightseers and picnic parties.

Every inch of the extensive grounds of the club was public property that day. From ten in the morning until late in the afternoon there was some amusement for the visitors—horse racing, hurdle jumping, polo matches, band concerts and gymkana sports.

There was a generous number of pennies picked up by Hamilton vendors of fruit, peanuts, popcorn and tonic, while a luncheon booth, conducted by Hamilton women on the edge of the polo grounds, served many a customer. It was indeed Hamilton's great day.

At the clubhouse at noon there was a generous gathering of North Shore society for luncheon parties, quite the most festive gathering which have been there this season.

At 10 a. m. the program of the day opened with class 1, jumpers for junior riders. Jack Hay Whitney of New York, the Myopia Hunt Club and James W. Proctor exhibited. The copper cups were captured by Masters Whitney and Proctor.

Class 2 was an exhibition of saddle horses for junior riders. Mrs. Thomas Laughlin's son, John Hay Whitney and James H. Proctor contested. Young Laughlin came first and young Proctor second.

Class 3 introduced the Abbott Cup contestants, with Leonard D. Ahl, the Myopia Hunt Club, B. B. Tuckerman, Jr., F. W. Sargent, Jr., Durell Hall, James H. Proctor, Gordon Prince and Robert H. Reece as exhibitors. Leonard D. Ahl's Strong Boy, Peggy Somers, Robert H. Reece's entry and King George, the club's entry, won first, second and third, respectively.

Polo ponies were shown in class 4 during the morning program by Ellis L. Dresel, H. P. McKean, Jr., Shaw McKean, John B. Moulton, James H. Proctor and William S. Patton. Shaw McKean's Harrie won first place; Ellis L. Dresel, second and third; James H. Proctor, fourth. In the heavyweight class Mr. Dresel took second, Moulton, third, and Shaw McKean, fourth.

Class 5 was a show of qualified hunters. Miss Julia Appleton, Olivia and Elise Ames, Marie Agassiz, Alice Thorndike, Mary Curtis and Evelyn Curtis were the women exhibitors. Robert H. Reece, Durell Hall, Ellis L. Dresel, B. Tuckerman, Jr., John S. Lawrence, Thomas W. Pierce, F. J. Alley, Alfred Dabney and Gordon C. Prince, gentlemen exhibitors. The club also exhibited Night Gown. The successful winners were Night Gown, first; Thomas W. Pierce, second; B. W. Palmer, third; Robert H. Reece, fourth.

Class 7 was a show of saddle horses for park hacks and road hacks. The exhibitors were the club, Ellis L. Dresel, Misses Ames, Thorndike and Phyllis Sears, Mr. Tuckerman, Jr., F. W. Sargent, Jr., and James H. Proctor. Chance, belonging to the club's stables, won first place; James H. Proctor, second; Miss Olivia Ames, third; Mr. Dresel, fourth.

The afternoon program opened at 2:45 o'clock with a show of teams of two hunters in jumps together. Miss Julia Appleton, the Misses Ames and Thorndike, Messrs. Reece, Tuckerman, Pierce and J. H. Proctor and the club's stables contested.

James W. Appleton and F. R. Appleton, Jr., rode Night Gown and X Ray to first victory. Miss Elise Ames and Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., were given second honors; F. R. Appleton, Jr., and T. W. Pierce, third, and Julia Appleton and Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., fourth.

In this class there were plenty of thrills, for riders were thrown and hurdles broken, but no serious accidents resulted. The young women showed great skill and nerve in this daring sport.

The Master's Challenge Cup was won by George von L. Meyer, Jr.'s Overland, ridden by Bayard Tuckerman, Jr. J. W. Appleton rode Night Gown, the club's famous horse, to second place.

The gymkana events—musical stalls, pushball and obstacle races—brought honors to Joan Whitney and Shaw McKean in the first and third events.

Harry Lee, Shaw McKean, Charles Appleton, Norman Prince, Alvin F. Shortwell and Gordon Prince formed the pushball teams.

The last event of the afternoon was the polo match. The reds were Harry Lee, Dudley P. Rogers, Shaw McKean and F. Blackwood Fay. The whites were Ellis L. Dresel, Norman Prince, J. H. Proctor and J. B. Moulton. The reds won by a score of 8 goals to 5½.

Cause of Baldness

Dandruff is the cause of nearly every case of baldness, and the principal cause of other ailments of the hair and scalp.

The one thing needed to overcome dandruff and give the hair the gloss of health is cleanliness.

You must clean the scalp of scales and dandruff, and you must keep the pores of your scalp open before you can hope to have beautiful hair.

From the sebaceous glands on your head there constantly comes an oily secretion to moisten the scalp and give a gloss to the hair.

Floating in the air are millions of fine particles of dust, dirt and disease germs.

These settle upon the head, mix with the oily secretion, and in a very short time dandruff and scales are formed. These scales stop up the pores, so that the hair roots are not nourished as they should be. Then the hair becomes sick, dies and falls out. Some people allow this dirt and these disease germs to accumulate on their heads for weeks without washing the scalp and hair.

Everybody's head and hair ought to be washed at least once a week. But don't make the mistake of using common soaps.

Common soaps may contain too much alkali, and leave the hair dry and harsh.

Improper soaps and shampoos actually do more harm than good. You should use Birt's Head Wash, the new scientific preparation.

It is made of Refined Creamy Soap, Cochin Cocoanut Oil, Whites of Eggs, Glycerin and Salicylic Acid. In [illegible]enic tubes 25c., at all drug and dept. stores.

Our Fashion Makers Should Announce the "White Year"

A Little Thing Like the Closing of the German Dyestuffs Market Will Not Be Permitted to Cast the American Nation Into Gloom—And Perhaps This War Will Teach Us Something About Granting Patent Rights to Foreign Monopolies.

Some of our friends in the textile cities are worried because the German chemists can send them no more artificial dyestuffs. The British have closed the ocean lanes to German commerce. Besides, 90 per cent. of the Germans engaged in making dyestuffs are off to the great war.

The American manufacturers of textiles should cheer up. We advise them to place their confidence in the common sense and patriotism of the American people.

If our manufacturers are unable to dye their cloths, they will find the American nation prepared to dress in white for a year, and glad to do it. Woman never looks better than she looks in white. Little girls, big girls, young girls, old girls, will be just as beautiful in white as they are in colors.

Perhaps we shall learn a lesson from the dearth of dyestuffs during the war. We have permitted the German chemists to patent their processes at Washington and go back to Germany to coin these American patents into gold.

Great Britain acts with more regard to her economic welfare and the well-being of her workmen. The British laws say to the German chemist, "Yes, we shall be glad to admit your processes to patent registry, BUT WE INSIST THAT THE MANUFACTURE MUST TAKE PLACE ON BRITISH SOIL." The result is that there are scores of dyestuff factories in England. Germans own them. Englishmen work them. British manufacturers will continue to take in dyestuffs as they are needed.

But let us not despair. Americans will have food in plenty, there will be no lack of excellent woolens, shoes will be abundant and in a few short weeks the loudest cry in this land will be for workmen, and more workmen, and yet more workmen.

Under the circumstances, we may be pleased to wear white. White is the emblem of purity. No other nation on earth has a better right to wear white in A. D. 1914.

Hail the White Year, in the United States of America!

It was then that the society adopted the name by which it is known to the present day. In the near future the building association of the society will have plans drawn for a new building. CHAPTER I.

A Speck in the Sky.

IT was Marta who first saw the speck in the sky. Her outcry and her bound from her seat at the teatable brought her mother and Colonel Westerling after her onto the lawn, where they became motionless figures, screening their eyes with their hands. The newest and most wonderful thing in the world at the time was this speck appearing above the irregular horizon of the Brown range, in view of a landscape that centuries of civilization had fertilized and cultivated and formed.

At the base of the range ran a line of white stone posts, placed by international commissions of surveyors to the nicety of an inch's variation. In the very direction of the speck's flight a spur of foot-hills extended into the plain that stretched away to the Gray range, distinct at the distance of thirty miles in the bright afternoon light. Faithful to their part in refusing to climb, the white posts circled around the spur, hugging the levels.

In the lap of the spur was La Tir, the old town, and on the other side of the boundary lay South La Tir, the new town. Through both ran the dusty ribbon of a road, drawn straight across the plain and over the glistening thread of a river. On its way to the pass of the Brown range it skirted the garden of the Gallands, which rose in terraces to a seventeenth-century house overlooking the old town from its outskirts. They were such a town, such a road, such a landscape as you may have seen on many European frontiers. The Christian people who lived in the region were like the Christian people you know if you look for the realities of human nature under the surface differences of language and habits.

TOWER STILL INTACT.

Beyond the house rose the ruins of a castle, its tower still intact. Marta always referred to the castle as the baron; for in her girlhood she had a way of personifying all inanimate things. If the castle walls were covered with hoar frost, she said that the baron was shivering; if the wind tore around the tower, she said that the baron was groaning over the democratic tendencies of the time. On such a Summer afternoon as this, the baron was growing old gracefully, at peace with his enemies.

Centuries older than the speck in the sky was the baron; but the pass road was many more, countless more, centuries older than he. It had been a trail of tribes long before Roman legions won a victory in the pass, which was acclaimed an imperial triumph. To hold the pass was to hold the range. All the blood shed there would make a red river, inundating the plain.

"Beside the old baron, we are parvenus," Marta would say. "And what a pervenu the baron would have been to the Roman aristocrat!"

"Our family is old enough—none older in the province!" Mrs. Galland would reply. "Marta, how your mind does wander! I'd get a headache just contemplating the things you are able to think of in five minutes."

The first Galland had built a house on the land that his king had given him for one of the most brilliant feats of arms in the history of the pass.

Even the tower, raised to the glory of an older family whose descendants, if any survived, were unaware of their lineage, had become known as the Galland tower. The Gallands were rooted in the soil of the frontier; they were used in having war's hot breath blow past their door; they were at home in the language and customs of two peoples; theirs was a peculiar tradition, which Marta had absorbed with her first breath. Town and plain and range were the first vista of landscape that she had seen; doubtless they would be the last.

MAKES FAREWELL CALL.

One or two afternoons a week Colonel Hedworth Westerling, commander of the regimental post of the Grays on the other side of the white posts, stretched his privilege of crossing the frontier and appeared for tea at the Gallands. It meant a pleasant half-hour breaking a long walk, a relief from garrison surroundings, and in view of the order, received that morning, this was to be a farewell call.

He had found Mrs. Galland an agreeable reflection of an aristocratic past. The daughter had what he defined vaguely as girlish piquancy. He found it amusing to try to answer her unusual questions; he liked the variety of her inventive mind, with its flashes of downright matter-of-factness.

Not until tea was served did he mention his new assignment; he was going to the general staff at the capital. Mrs. Galland murmured her congratulations in conventional fashion.

Marta's chair was drawn back from the table. She leaned forward in a favorite position of hers when she was intensely interested, with hands clasped over her knee, which her mother always found aggravatingly tomboyish. She had a mass of lustrous black hair and a mouth rather large in repose, but capable of changing curves of emotion. Her large, dark eyes, luminously deep under long lashes, if not the rest of her face, had beauty. Her head was bent, the lashes forming a line with her brow now, and her eyes had the still flame of wonder that they had when she was looking all around a thing and through it to find what it meant.

"Some day you will be chief of staff, the head of the Gray army!" she suddenly exclaimed.

Westerling started as if he had been surprised in a secret. Then he flushed slightly.

"Why?" he asked with forced carelessness. "Your reasons? They're more interesting that your prophecy."

"Because you have the will to be," she said without emphasis, in the impersonal revelations of thought. "You want power. You have ambition."

FEARS SPECK IN SKY

He looked the picture of it, with his square jaw, his well-moulded head set close to the shoulders on a sturdy neck, his even teeth showing as his lips parted in an unconscious smile.

"Marta, Marta! She is—is so explosive," Mrs. Galland remarked apologetically to the colonel.

"I asked for her reasons. I brought it on myself—and it is not a bad compliment," he replied. Indeed, he had never received one so thrilling.

His smile, a smile well pleased with itself, remained as Mrs. Galland began to talk of other things, and its lingering satisfaction disappeared only with Marta's cry at sight of the speck in the sky over the Brown range. She was out on the lawn before the others had risen from their seats.

"An aeroplane! Hurry!" she called.

Naturally, the business of war, watching for every invention that might serve its ends, was the first patron of flight. Captain Arthur Lanstron, pupil of a pioneer aviator, had been warned by him and by the chief of staff of the Browns, who was looking on, to keep in a circle close to the ground. But he was doing so well that he thought he would try rising a little higher. The summits of the range shot under him, unfolding a variegated rug of landscape. He dipped the planes slightly, intending to follow the range's descent and again they answered to his desire. The tower loomed before him as suddenly as if it had been shot up out of the earth. He must turn, and quickly, to avoid disaster; he must turn, or he would be across the white posts in the enemy's country.

"Oh!" groaned Marta and Mrs. Galland together.

In an agony of suspense they saw the fragile creation of cloth and bamboo and metal, which had seemed as secure as an albatross riding on the lap of a steady wind, dip far over, careen back in the other direction, and then the whirring noise that had grown with its flight ceased. It was no longer a thing of winged life, defying the law of gravity, but a thing dead, falling under the burden of a living weight.

"The engine has stopped!" exclaimed Westerling, any trace of emotion in his observant imperturbability that of satisfaction that the machine was the enemy's. He was thinking of the exhibition, not of the man in the machine.

Marta was thinking of the man who was about to die. She rushed down the terrace steps wildly, as if her going and her agonized prayer could avert the inevitable. The plane, descending, skimmed the garden wall and passed out of sight. She heard a thud, a cracking of braces, a ripping of cloth, but no cry.

Westerling had started after her, exclaiming, "This is a case for first aid!" while Mrs. Galland, taking the steps as fast as she could, brought up in the rear. Through the gateway in the garden wall could be seen the shoulders of a young officer, a streak of red coursing down his cheek, rising from the wreck. An inarticulate sob of relief broke from Marta's throat, followed by quick gasps of breath. Captain Arthur Lanstron was looking into the startled eyes of a young girl that seemed to reflect his own emotions of the moment after having shared those he had in the air.

"I flew! I flew clear over the range, at any rate!" he said. "And I'm alive. I managed to hold her so she missed the wall and made an easy bump."

He got one foot free of the wreck and that leg was all right. She shared his elation. Then he found that the other was uninjured, just as she cried in distress:

"But your hand—oh, your hand!"

His left hand hung limp from the wrist, cut, mashed and bleeding. Its nerves numbed, he had not as yet felt any pain from the injury. Now he regarded it in a kind of awakening stare of realization of a deformity to come.

"Wool-gathering again!" he muttered to himself crossly.

Then, seeing that she had turned white, he thrust the disgusting thing behind his back and twinged with the movement. The pain was arriving.

"It must be bandaged! I have a handkerchief she begged. "I'm not going to faint or anything like that!"

"Only bruised—and it's the left. I am glad it was not the right," he replied. Westerling arrived and joined Marta in offers of assistance just as they heard the prolonged honk of an automobile demanding the right of way at top speed in the direction of the pass.

"Thank you, but they're coming for me," said Lanstron to Westerling as he glanced up the road.

MADE A CONTRAST

Westerling was looking at the wreck. Lanstron, who recognized him as an officer, though in mufti, kicked a bit of the torn cloth over the apparatus to hide it. At this Westerling smiled faintly. Then Lanstron saluted as officer to officer might salute across the white posts, giving his name and receiving in return Westerling's.

They made a contrast, these two men, the colonel of the Grays, swart and sturdy, his physical vitality so evident, and the captain of the Browns, some seven or eight years the junior, bareheaded, in dishevelled fatigue uniform, his lips twitching, his slender body quivering with the pain that he could not control, while his rather bold forehead and delicate, sensitive features suggested a man of nerve and nerves who might have left experiments in a laboratory for an adventure in the air. There was a kind of challenge in their glances; the challenge of an ancient feud of their peoples; of the professional rivalry of polite duellists. Lanstron's slight figure seemed to express the weaker number of the three million soldiers of the Browns; Westerling's bulkier one, the four million five hundred thousand of the Grays.

"You had a narrow squeak and you made a very snappy recovery at the last second," said Westerling, passing a compliment across the white posts.

"That's in the line of duty for you and me, isn't it?" Lanstron replied, his voice thick with pain as he forced a smile.

There was no pose in his fortitude. He was evidently disgusted with himself over the whole business, and he turned to the group of three officers and a civilian who alighted from a big Brown army automobile as if he were prepared to have them say their worst. They seemed between the impulse of reprimanding and embracing him.

"I hope that you are not surprised at the result," said the oldest of the officers, a man of late middle age, rather affectionately and teasingly. He wore a single order on his breast, a plain iron cross, and the insignia of his rank was that of a field-marshal.

"Not now. I should be again, sir," said Lanstron, looking full at the field-marshal in the appeal of one asking for another chance. "I was wool-gathering. But I shall not wool-gather next time. I've got a reminder more urgent that a string tied around my finger."

HELPED INTO AUTO

"Yes, that hand needs immediate attention," said the doctor. He and another officer began helping Lanstron into the automobile.

"Good-by!" he called to the young girl, who was still watching him with big, sympathetic eyes. "I am coming back soon and land in the field, there, and when I do, I'll claim a bunch of flowers."

"Do! What fun!" she cried, as the car started.

"The field-marshal was Partow, their chief of staff?" Westerling asked.

"Yes," said Mrs. Galland. "I remember when he was a young infantry officer before the last war, before he had won the iron cross and become so great. He was not of an army family—a doctor's son, but very clever and skilful."

"Wasn't it thrilling and—and terrible!" Marta exclaimed.

"Yes, like war at our own door again," replied Mrs. Galland, who knew war. She had seen war raging on the pass road. Lanstron, the young man said his name was," she resumed after a pause. "No doubt the Lanstrons of Thorbourg. An old family and many of them in the army."

"The way he refused to give in—that was fine!" said Marta.

COURAGE CHEAP

"Courage is the cheapest thing an army has! You can get hundreds of young officers who are glad to take a risk of that kind. The thing is," and his fingers pressed in on the palm of his hand in a pounding gesture of the forearm, "to direct and command—head work—organization!"

"If war should come again—" Marta began. Mrs. Galland nudged her. A Brown never mentioned war to an officer of the Grays; it was not at all in the accepted properties. But Marta rushed on: "So many would be engaged that it would be more horrible than ever."

"You cannot make omelets without breaking eggs," Westerling answered with suave finality.

"The aeroplane will take its place as an auxiliary," he went on, his mind still running on the theme of her prophecy, which the meeting with Lanstron had quickened. "But war will, as ever, be won by the bayonet that takes and holds a position. We shall have no miracle victories, no—"

There he broke off. He did not accompany Mrs. Galland and Marta back to the house, but made his adieus at the garden gate.

"I'm sure that I shall never marry a soldier!" Marta burst out as she and her mother were ascending the steps.

CHAPTER II.

Ten Years Later

HIS EXCELLENCY the chief of staff of the Grays was seldom in his office. His Excellency had years, rank, prestige. The breast of his uniform sagged with the weight of his decorations. He appeared for the army at great functions; his picture was in the shop windows. Hedworth Westerling, the new vice-chief of staff, was content with this arrangement. His years would not permit him the supreme honor. This was for a figurehead, while he had the power.

His appointment to the staff ten years ago had given him the field he wanted, the capital itself, for the play of his abilities. His vital energy, his impressive personality, his gift for courting the influences that counted, whether man's or woman's, his astute readiness in stooping to some measures that were in keeping with the times but not with army precedent, had won for him the goal of his ambition. He had passed over the heads of older men, whom many thought his betters, rather ruthlessly. Those who would serve him loyally he drew around him; those who were bitter he crowded out of his way.

In the adjoining room, occupied by Westerling, the walls were hung with the silhouettes of infantrymen, such as you see at manoeuvres, in different positions of firing, crouching in shallow trenches, or lying flat on the stomach on level earth. Another silhouette, that of an infantryman running, was peppered with white points in arms and legs and parts of the body that were not vital, to show in how many places a man may be hit with a small-calibre bullet and still survive.

PERSONALITIES

In this day of universal European conception, if Westerling were to win in war it would be with five millions—five hundred thousand more than when he faced a young Brown officer over the wreck of an aeroplane—including the reserves; each man running, firing, crouching, as was the figure on the wall, and trying to give more of the white points that peppered the silhouette than he received.

Now Turcas, the assistant vice-chief of staff, and Bouchard, chief of the division of intelligence, standing on either side of Westerling's deck, awaiting his decisons on certan matters which they had brought to his attention. Both were older than Westerling, Turcas by ten and Bouchard by fifteen years.

Turcas had been strongly urged in inner army circles for the place that Westerling had won, but his manner and his ability to court influence were against him. A lath of a man and stiff as a lath, pale, with thin, tightly-drawn lips, quiet, steel-gray eyes, a tracery of blue veins showing on his full temples, he suggested the ascetic no less than the soldier, while his incisive brevity of speech, flavored now and then with pungent humor, without any inflection in his dry voice, was in keeping with his appearance. He arrived with the clerks in the morning and frequently remained after they were gone. As a master of detail Westerling regarded him as an invaluable assistant, with certain limitations, which were those of the pigeonhole and the treadmill. As for Bouchard, nature had meant him to be a wheel-horse. He had never had any hope of being chief of staff. Hawk-eyed, with a great beak nose and iron-gray hair, intensely and solemnly serious, lacking a sense of humor, he would have looked at home with his big, bony hands gripping a broadsword hilt and his lank body clothed in chain armor. He had a mastiff's devotion to its master for his chief.

APPRECIATED LOYALTY

"Since Lanstron became chief of intelligence of the Browns information seems to have stopped," said Westerling, but not complainingly. He appreciated Bouchard's loyalty.

"Yes, they say he even burns his laundry bills, he is so careful," Bouchard replied.

"But that we ought to know," Westerling proceeded, referring very insistently to a secret of the Browns which had baffled Bouchard. "Try a woman," he went on with that terse, hard directness which reflected one of his sides. "There is nobody like a woman for that sort of thing. Spend enough to get the right woman."

Turcas and Bouchard exchanged a glance, which rose suggestively from the top of the head of the seated vice-chief of staff. Turcas smiled slightly, while Bouchard was graven as usual.

"You could hardly reach Lanstron though you spent a queen's ransom," said Bouchard in his literal fashion.

"I should say not!" Westerling exclaimed. "No doubt about Lanstron's being all there! I saw him ten years ago after his first aeroplane flight under conditions that proved it. However, he must have susceptible subordinates."

"We'll set all the machinery we have to work to find one, sir," Bouchard replied.

"Another thing, we must dismiss any idea that they are concealing either artillery or dirigibles or planes that we do not know of," continued Westerling. "That is a figment of our apprehensions. The fact that we find no truth in the rumors proves that there is none. Such things are too important to be concealed by one army from another."

"Lanstron certainly cannot carry them in his pockets," remarked Turcas. "Still, we must be sure," he added thoughtfully, more to himself than to Westerling, who had already turned his attention to a document which Turcas laid on the desk.

"The 12th Regiment has been ordered to South La Tir, but no order yet given for the 132d, whose place it takes,' 'he explained.

"Let it remain for the present" Westerling replied.

ALONE IN CONFIDENCE

After they had withdrawn, the look that passed between Turcas and Bouchard was a pointed question. The 132d to remain at South La Tir! Was there something more than "newspaper talk" in this latest diplomatic crisis between the Grays and the Browns? Westerling alone was in the confidence of the premier of late. Any exchange of ideas between the two subordinates would be fruitless surmise and against the very instinct of staff secrecy, where every man knew only his work and asked about no one else's.

Westerling ran through the papers that Turcas had prepared for him. If Turcas had written them, Westerling knew that they were properly done. Having cleared his desk into the hands of his executive clerk, he looked at the clock. It had barely turned four. He picked up the final staff report of observations on the late Balkan campaign, just printed in book form, glanced at it and laid it aside. Already he knew the few lessons afforded by this war "done on the cheap," with limited equipment and over bad roads. No dirigibles had been used and few planes. It was no criterion, except in the effect of the fire of the new pattern guns, for the conflict of vast masses of highly trained men against vast masses of highly trained men, with rapid transportation over good roads, complete equipment, thorough organization, backed by generous resources, in the cataclysm of two great European powers.

Rather idly, now, he drew a pad toward him and, taking up a pencil, made the figures seventeen and twenty-seven. Then he made the figures thirty-two and forty-two. He blackened them with repeated tracings as he mused. This done, he put seventeen under twenty-seven and thirty-two under forty-two. He made the subtraction and studied the two tens.

A SUM IN DIVISION

A swing door opened softly and his executive clerk reappeared with a soft tread.

"Some papers for your signature, sir,' 'he said as he slipped them on the blotter in front of Westerling.

In an agony of suspense they saw the aeroplane fall with its human freight.

"And the 132d—no order about that, sir?" he asked.

"None. It remains!" Westerling replied.

The clerk went out impressed. His chief taking to sums of subtraction and totally preoccupied. The 132d to remain. He, too, had a question-mark in his secret mind.

Westerling proceeded with his mathematics. Having heavily shaded the tens, he essayed a sum in division. He found that ten went into seventy just seven times.

"One-seventh the alloted span of life!" he mused. "Take off fifteen years for youth and fifteen after fifty-five—nobody counts after that, though I mean to—and you have ten into forty, which is one-fourth. That is a good deal. But it's more to a woman than to a man—yes, a lot more to a woman than to a man!"

The clerk was right in thinking Westerling preoccupied; but it was not with the international crisis. Over his coffee the name of Miss Marta Galland, in the list of arrivals at a hotel, had caught his eye in the morning paper. A note to her had brought an answer, saying that her time was limited, but she would be glad to have him call at five that afternoon.

Westerling realized that the question of marriage as a social requirement might arise when he should become officially chief of staff with the retirement of His Excellency the field-marshal. For the present he enjoyed his position as a bachelor who was the most favored man in the army too much to think of marriage.

HAD FORESEEN POWER

It was a little surprising that the bell that the girl of seventeen had rung in his secret mind when he was on one of the first rounds of the ladder, now lost in the mists of a lower stratum of existence, should ever tinkle again. Yet he had heard its note in the tone of her prophecy with each step in his promotion; and while the other people whom he had known at La Tir were the vaguest shadows of personalities, her picture was as definite in detail as when she said: "You have the will! You have the ambition!" She had recognised in him the power that he felt; foreseen his ascent to the very apex of the pyramid. She was still unmarried, which was strange; for she had not been bad-looking and she was of a fine old family. What was she like now? Commonplace and provincial, most likely. Many of the people he had known in his early days appeared so when he met them again. But, at the worst, he looked for an interesting half-hour.

The throbbing activity of the streets of the capital, as his car proceeded on the way to her hotel, formed an energetic accompaniment to his gratifying backward survey of how all his plans had worked out from the very day of the prophecy. Had he heard the remark of a great manufacturer to the banker at his side in a passing limousine, "There goes the greatest captain of industry of us all!" Westerling would only have thought: "Certainly, I am chief of staff. I am at the head of all your workmen at one time or another!" Had he heard the banker's answer, "But pretty poor pay, pretty small dividends!" he would have thought, "Splendid dividends—the dividends of power!"

He had a caste comtempt for the men of commerce, with their mercenary talk about credit and market prices; and also for the scientists, doctors, engineers and men of other professions, who take of things in books which he did not understand. Reading books was one of the faults of Turcas, his assistant. No bookish soldier, he knew, had ever been a great general. He resented the growing power of these leaders of the civil world, taking distinction away from the military, even when, as a man of parts, he had to court their influence. His was the profession that was and ever should be the elect. A penniless subaltern was a gentleman, while he could never think of a man in business as one.

EYES LIGHTED

All the faces in the street belonged to a strange, busy world outside his interest and thoughts. They formed what was known as the public, often making a clatter about things which they did not understand, when they should obey the orders of their superiors. Of late, their clatter had been about the extra taxes for the recent increase of the standing forces by another corps. The public was bovine with a parrot's head. Yet it did not admire the toiling ox, but the eagle and the lion.

As his car came to the park his eyes lighted at sight of one of the dividends—one feature of urban life that ever gave him a thrill. A battalion of the 128th, which he had ordered that afternoon to the very garrison at South La Tir that he had once commanded, was marching through the main avenue. Youths all, of twenty-one or two, they were in a muddy-grayish uniform which was the color of the plain as seen from the veranda of the Galland house. Where these came from were other boys growing up to take their places. The mothers of the nation were doing their duty. All the land was a breeding-ground for the dividends of Hedworth Westerling.

At the far side of the park he saw another kind of dividend—another group of marching men. These were not in uniform. They were the unemployed. Many were middle-aged, with worn, tired faces. Beside the flag of the country at the head of the procession was that of universal radicalism. And his car had to stop to let them pass. For an instant the indignation of military autocracy rose strong within him at sight of the national colors in such company. But he noted how naturally the men kept step; the solidarity of their movement. The stamp of their army service in youth could not be easily removed. He realized the advantage of heading an army in which defence was not dependent on a mixture of regulars and volunteers, but on universal conscription that brought every able-bodied man under discipline.

PAWNS OF HIS WILL

These reservists, in the event of war, would hear the call of race and they would fight for the one flag that then had any significance. Yes, the old human impulses would predominate and the only enemy would be on the other side of the frontier. They would be the pawns of his will—the will that Marta Galland had said would make him chief of staff.

Wasn't war the real cure for the general unrest? Wasn't the nation growing stale from the long peace? He was ready for war now that he had become vice-chief, when the retirement of His Excellency, unable to bear the weight of his years and decorations in the field, would make him the supreme commander. One ambition gained, he heard the appeal of another; to live to see the guns and rifles that had fired only blank cartridges in practice pouring out shells and bullets, and all the battalions that had played at sham war in manoeuvres engaged in real war, under his direction. He saw his columns sweeping up the slopes of the Brown range. Victory was certain. He would be the first to lead a great modern arm against a great modern army; his place as the master of modern tactics secure in the minds of all the soldiers of the world. The public would forget its unrest in the thrill of battles won and provinces conquered, and its clatter would be that of acclaim for a new idol of its old faith.

CHAPTER III.

The Second Prophecy

MARTA, when she had received the note from Westerling, had been in doubt as to her answer. Her curiosity to see him again was not of itself compelling. The actual making of the prophecy was rather dim to her mind until he recalled it. She had heard of his rise and she had heard, too, things about him which a girl of twenty-seven can better understand than a girl of seventeen. His reason for wanting to see her he had said was to "renew an old acquaintance." He could have little interest in her, and her interest in him was that he was head of the Gray army. His work had intimate relation to that which the Marta of twenty-seven, a Marta with a mission, had set for herself.

A page came to tell Westerling that Miss Galland would be down directly. When she appeared she crossed the room with a flowing, spontaneous vitality that appealed to him as something familiar.

"Ten years, isn't it?" she exclaimed as she seated herself on the other side of the tea table. "And, let me see, you took two lumps, if I remember?"

"None now," he said.

"Do you find it fattening?" she asked.

He recognized the mischievous sparkle of the eyes, the quizzical turn of the lips, which was her asset in keeping any question from being personal. Nevertheless, he flushed slightly.

"A change of taste," he averred.

"Since you've become such a great man?" she hazarded. "Is that too strong?" This referred to the tea.

"No, just right!" he nodded.

He was studying her with the polite, veiled scrutiny of a man of the world. A materialist, he would look a woman over as he would a soldier when he had been a major-general making an inspection. She was slim, supple; he liked slim, supple women. Yes, she was twenty-seven, with the vivacity of seventeen retained, though she were on the edge of being an old maid according to the conventional notions. Neck and shoulders that happened to be at his side at dinner, he had found, when they were really beautifully, were not averse to his glance of appreciative and discriminating admiration of physical charm. But he saw her shrug slightly and caught a spark from her eyes that made him vaguely conscious of an offence to her sensibilities, and he was wholly conscious that the suggestion, bringing his faculties up sharply, had the pleasure of a novel sensation.

PROPHECY CAME TRUE

"How fast you have gone ahead!" she said. "That little prophecy of mine did come true. You are chief of staff!"

After a smile of satisfaction he corrected her.

"Not quite; vice-chief—the right-hand man of His Excellency. I am a buffer between him and the heads of divisions. This has led to the erroneous assumption which I cannot too forcibly deny—"

He was proceeding with the phraseology habitual whenever men of women, to flatter him, had intimated that they realized that he was the actual head of the army. His Excellency, with the prestige of a career, must be kept soporifically enjoying the forms of authority. To arouse his jealousy might curtail Westerling's actual power.

"Yes, yes!" breathed Marta softly, arching her eyebrows a trifle as she would when looking all around and through a thing or when she found any one beating about the bush. The little frown disappeared and she smiled understandingly. "You know I'm not a perfect goose!" she added. "Had you been made chief of staff in name, too, all the old generals would have been in the sulks and the young generals jealous," she continued. "The one way that you might have the power to exercise was by proxy."

This downright frankness was another reflection of the old days before he was at the apex of the pyramid. Now it was so unusual in his experience as to be almost a shock. On the point of arguing, he caught a mischievous, delightful "Isn't that so?" in her eyes, and replied:

"Yes, I shouldn't wonder if it were!"

Why shouldn't he admit the truth to the one who had rung the bell of his secret ambition long ago by recognizing in him the ability to reach his goal? He marvelled at her grasp of the situation.

WANTED REALITY

"It wasn't so very hard to say, was it?" she asked happily, in response to his smile. Then, her gift of putting herself in another's place while she strove to look at things with his purpose and vision, in full play, she went on in a different tone, as much to herself as to him: "You have labored to make yourself master of a mighty organization. You did not care for the non-essentials. You wanted the reality of shaping results."

"Yes, the results, the power!" he exclaimed.

"Fifteen hundred regiments!" she continued thoughtfully, looking at a given point rather than at him. "Every regiment a blade which you would bring to an even sharpness! Every regiment a unit of a harmonious whole, knowing how to screen itself from fire and give fire as long as bidden, in answer to your will if war comes! That is what you live and plan for, isn't it?"

"Yes, exactly! Yes, you have it!" he said. His shoulders stiffened as he thrilled at seeing a picture of himself, as he wanted to see himself, done in bold strokes. It assured him that not only had his own mind grown beyond what were to him the narrow associations of his old La Tir days, but that hers had grown, too. "And you—what have you been doing all these years?" he asked.

"Living the life of a woman on a country estate," she replied. "Since you made a rule that no Gray officers should cross the frontier we have been a little lonelier, having only the Brown officers to tea. Did you really find it so bad for discipline in your own case?" she concluded with playful solemnity.

"One cannot consider individual cases in a general order," he explained. "And, remember, the Browns made the ruling first. You see, every year means a tightening—yes, a tightening, as arms and armies grow more complicated and the maintaining of staff secrets more important. And you have been all the time at La Tir, truly?" he asked, changing the subject. He was convinced that she had acquired something that could not be gained on the outskirts of a provincial town.

"No. I have travelled. I have been quite around the world."

"You have!" This explained much. "How I envy you! That is a privilege I shall not know until I am superannuated." While he should remain chief of staff he must be literally a prisoner in his own country.
